And like all stereotypes, there is a grain of truth underneath it all.
You would have to be either naive, or in an extreme form of denial, if you can't admit that a good percentage of what's heard, on a daily basis, over the CB band, does not come from the most "desirable" operators. And coming from someone who was there for the last 32 years,
I can say, without hesitation, that's it's gotten worse over time.

That's not to say that ham radio has also showed a deciding slip down on the taste and morality scale. Both ham and CB radio are, afterall, only mirrors of society itself.

The problem is, that for any "CB group" to have any credibility, they would have to dissassociate themselves from the illegal crowd. You can't expect to pass yourself off as a legitimate lobbying force, while at the same time freely advocating the violation of Federal communications law.

You can lobby for rule changes, and I'm all for that, but you have to follow the current rules until then. Otherwise you're just the radio form of the Hell Angels. It's hard to respect any group that shows little respect itself.....

Well, since the FCC has classified FRS, GMRS, MURS, and Class D CB under the same part 95 umbrella, of "personal radio services", it is not a stretch to call FRS or GMRS "UHF CB", and MURS as "VHF CB", as it would be accurate. What's the matter, don't like the stigma associated with 11 meter CB, to be attached to another band? A "Citizen's Band", afterall, is nothing more than a common description of the purpose of the service. Since FRS, MURS, Class D, and GMRS, are all available to "citizens" with nothing more than a monetary fee (GMRS), or no license at all (FRS, MURS, Class D) they all fit the "citizen's band" description.

Why? The FCC is the only authority that matters in this case, and the FCC says that all these services fall under the same classification.

I'll agree with that. It's frightening just how many MCSC's there are who really don't know how to apply what they've supposedly passed the tests on. It's gotten so bad, that many companies, are starting to downplay the importance of this certification. It's kind of a double edged sword. On the one hand, you look like you don't know much if you don't have the certificate. Yet even if you have it, there's still no guarantee that you know anything. Most businesses are now looking at both certification plus years of real work experience. This can be a bit tough if you're just starting out. But hands on experience, is without a doubt, the best way to REALLY learn something.

3103. Texas Star Turbo Mod Help

Hi:

I have an old Texas Star 667V Turbo Mod amplifier and it needs some freshening up a bit to make it work properly again like it used to. I've looked all over the internet and I can't find a schematic or any other information on it at all. Does anyone have or know where I can get a schematic with voltage readings for this exact model and possibly a service manual and parts list? This poor amp has been through hell and it has a LOT of history with it and many memories and I'd sure like to get it working good again.

I found the schematic and service manual for the newer 667s on the CB Tricks web site, but there has been some changes to the circuit since mine was made. I got mine in 1994. I was told a long time ago that the guy from Texas Star or someone who knows the Texas Star people really well frequented this message board quite often and so I thought I would start here first. It is such a nice amplifier and I'd really like to get it running again like it used to and have it with the parts and part values that it was originally made with. Any help and information would be GREATLY appreciated. Thank you very much for your time and help.

And since most CBers don't know that N3CVJ exists, we're even.

There have been attempts to "organize" CBers and they have failed, primarily because there's no one, single best way to contact them (even this newsgroup doesn't do it since most CBers don't know the UseNet exists). And every time someone tries to start such a group, half a dozen other people splinter the attempt by trying to start one of their own.

Rather like ham radio today: The ARRL is a mere shadow of what it once was because it is pretty much irrelevant to most licensed hams, there are a couple other groups purporting to "represent" amateurs, and all of them are ineffective.

Shottky barrier diodes have a lower noise figure than germanium or silicon diodes do. They help most in the AM detector and NB circuits.
You may not notice much difference in the sideband circuit. I've used ECG583 and NTE583 diodes with good results.

Correct Bert,
I was hearing all the whining about how Doug did this, Doug didn't do this, I decided to do what George said to Vinnie (read a book)
So I went to the site and listened to it myself. So it's up to the FCC to make it's decision and proceed with the proper enforcement they feel is necessary.

Ok Bert simple question is twisty a ham? Is mopar a ham? is Landwhale a ham?
is Randy a Ham? is scott a ham ?

No, No, and No. So what are they learning from the rain report? They ask why leland, Dave or myself use this NG because we are not Cber. perhaps I want to learn or perhaps I am also a cber so why do they always Cry what are you guys doing here. I figured why not ask these Putzs! the same thing It should work both ways right Bert.

There's your opportunity to find out who Twist is. You have to write and mail the check to someone.

BTW, f*ck the code. That's why I clearly said written tests.

Why don't you fix the misspelling in your email addy. It's "their", but the proper form is "they're", a contraction of "they are".

Ok, Tony,

Probably not, Probably is, probably is, very likely is, and I'd almost bet the farm he is...in that order. Short answer on all...maybe.

Truth is that neither of us can be sure. Take Twist for example. If I were a freebander, I know I wouldn't advertise my callsign...so why should he? I've known plenty of guys who freebanded and were also HF privied hams, it's really not all that uncommon. Pulling "double-duty" is nothing new.

> No, No, and No. So what are they learning from the rain report?

Maybe they're keeping tabs on the level of 11-meter enforcement?

Easy, because folks who respond <Key word, don't miss it!> to other's threads overstating legalities that have been covered ad nauseum in other threads in which those very same folks also participated does NOT fit the description of "perhaps I want to learn." SO then, what ARE these folks doing here?

Easy, because folks who respond <Key word, don't miss it!> to other's threads overstating legalities that have been covered ad nauseum in other threads in which those very same folks also participated does NOT fit the description of "perhaps I want to learn." SO then, what ARE these folks doing here?

The same thing with the info they are doing with doug go ahead you can say troll, whatch when I post mopar and randy andd scottie etc they will troll my post with nothing about Cb, so honestly Bert who really are the trolls here. Remember they engage the trolls so you figur it out. If thy left the trolls alone they would be arguing amongst themselves. look at the archives all amp makers arguing used to dominate this forum who had a bigger amp who did more bird watts. People like to toss the word troll around that is why they get mad when i call them trolls lol I am just "returning it to it's rightful owner " as twistyt once said.

He is. As far as I know, Keith is not one for advocating the deliberate disregard of federal radio rules, which pertain to both CB and ham radio. He has also made comments regarding personal responsibility and the role of society in the "mess" that we find ourselves in today. Concepts that are apparently alluding you and your miopic comprehensive abilities.

And you, as the posterboy for federal criminals, have no place to be dictating the standards by which other people are judged or viewed. Your opinion is warped and unrealistic. Such as can be expected when suffering the affects of anti-social personality disorder.

> Keith and I have > had our difference of opinions but both of us got past it and learn how > to argue the topic.

Until he says something that you don't like, and then you'll twist his words, unleash a string of implied meanings and deliberate obfuscations, laced with ad-hominem attacks and then turn around and claim that "he started it". Your pattern is all to clear and archived for all to see. You started with me the minute I suggested that by ignoring FCC rules, you were a defacto federal criminal. That set you off, and the rest is history. You've been attempting to malign my character ever since, in your own uniquely juvenille and sophomoric way.

> Trying to stick your nose in Keiths ass may well be > all fine for you, but the light will shine on your antics forever more.

Funny, that's what you seem to be doing. I was merely agreeing with a comment that Keith made, and you get all defensive. If anyone's nose is brown, it's yours. And why do you automatically feel the need to comment on every thread that has my name on it, for nothing more than to throw common insults? You've had nothing constructive to say about anyone or anything for many months now. You're nothing but a disruptive parasite on this group. You can make the same claim back at me, but I've been here for close to 10 years now, coexisting harmoniously with other people. So why is it only now that there is friction? The obvious answer is you.

> And not one peron has ever put you down as a n "asshole" because of your

Your opinion is irrelevant.

> >and have little tolerance for, those who have >little regard for the

Sure it is. You proliferate ideas that are destructive to the established societal order, and can't seem to understand why you are criticised and taken to task for it. You wouldn't expect to go to the "alt.cats" newsgroup talking about taking target practice at "kitty", without retribution. So why is it so hard for you to understand that people don't like what you're putting forth here? Of course the real answer is that to a sociopath, you're right and the world's crazy.

> It's akin to the walk in the park..most of us can discuss the topic of the

We were doing fine here to, until the "bad citizens" took over with their rampant disregard for the rule of law. And you have the nerve to look at us like we're the problem. We're not the ones breaking the law. And if you consider the truth to be an insult, you'd better get over it. If you're that ashamed of what you are, maybe you should try to change it.

> You were never taught the difference, so you know no > better..,if you were, it makes you all the worse.

If you put forth idiotic ideas, then that makes you an idiot. If you support selective disregarding of rules of law, that makes you a criminal. Sorry if your insecure psyche is so easily bruised by the reality of truth.

> >Bad citizens may be more fun at parties, but >they're still bad

Except that I haven't lied. And your pitiful attempts to prove otherwise are laughable.

> .and yes, you are Really? Then I'm sure you won't mind telling me what I have to gain by all this? What possible selfish motivation would I have to defend the rule of law, and those who are being bullied for it? It's much more selfish when you consider consider the motive of those who endorse the selective breaking of laws. You do it because laws limit your fun. It's all about what you want and the hell with everyone else. So tell me again, who's being selfish?

> AS many times as you have been proved wrong,

When have I been proven wrong? Your half-baked, and comical twisted attempts aside?

> it has just come to my attention that lil Davey Hall has a problem with being > WRONG.

I don't have a problem with being wrong, if it can be shown that I was indeed wrong. Usually I don't offer up an opinion on a subject, unless I know something about it. So the likelihood of me being wrong is slim. I will admit that I was wrong initially about you. I originally thought that your random psychoses were the result of abuse of controlled substances. I can see now that what you have is much more than a simple drug problem.

But since we're on the topic of being wrong, lets go down the list of your wrongs:

You were wrong about the stationmaster.
You were wrong about me currently using Villanova as my ISP or newsserver.
You were wrong when you claimed that I lied about a CBer in my area getting cited and fined for disturbing the peace, for infractions involving disrupting his neighbors radio and TV with foul language.
You were wrong about me posting as other people.
You were wrong when you tried to make a case that the use of modified amplifiers by licensed hams on the ham bands was illegal.
You were wrong about Sparky being Aaron.
You were wrong when you speculated about my lifestyle, and whether I had custody of my daughter, and that my grandfather was supposedly "abusive".

You were wrong when you tried to make the claim that a 4 watt skip signal thousands of miles away, would walk over a 4 watt local station a half mile away, totally neglecting a little phenomenon called "path loss".
You were wrong when you claimed that skip cycle 23 was stronger than the last 2 cycles. Even when presented with several websites to back up my data, you claim that the "only site that matters" is the Royal Observatory in Belgium. A place that has no website, or easy means to verify your claim. But here's an interesting clip from one site, where it appear that your great Royal observatory AGREES with the rest of us that cycle 23 is lower than the previous cycles. So the qusetion remains, are you blind, have a cognitive disorder, or are you once again, lying?

>From http://fcrosby.com/ears/archives/feb_2000.html

* -- FEBRUARY PROPAGATION --

* Based on its 3 years' progress, Cycle 23 resembles Cycle 17 which peaked in April * 1937 with a smoothed sunspot number of 119.2, quite a bit shy of Cycle 21's
* December '79 SSN peak of 164.5, or Cycle 22's July '89 SSN peak of 158.5. * Regardless, it's better than Cycle 16's April '28 "peak" SSN of only 78.1! While
* the Royal Observatory in Belgium predicts Cycle 23 to have peaked with a SSN of 116 * in either December '99 or January 2000, the folks out in Boulder, CO
* expect it to peak between June and September with a SSN of 114. Since SSNs lag * daily/monthly readings by 3 months, we'll just have to wait and see.

Lest you try to squirm out of this by claiming that this data is too old, another site, which is also current, tells the tale once again:

http://www.dxlc.com/solar/cyclcomp.html

There are many other small examples of where you did the literal equivilent of stuffing your foot in your mouth, but these are the most illustrative. It seem that you have a much greater penchant for being wrong than those who you accuse of the same thing. Can you say hypocrite? How about double standards? Sure you can....

> >I also find it a bit ironic, that many of the >harsher critics of those

The FCC never condoned or authorized "handles" on CB. In fact the whole point of licensing and call signs was to IDENTIFY the user. They reluctantly allowed a handle to be used IN ADDITION TO, not INSTEAD OF, a call sign. It was only after they washed their hands of the whole band and abandoned licensing that they basically said "do what you want", as far as identifying yourself. So once again, you're rolling your own, and add one more thing to your list of "wrongs".

Then why do you care what my ISP is, who Aaron really is, whether or not George is Doug, and Sparky is Aaron, and who does what to whom? If anyone is obsessed with people's identities, it's you. And if you're so easy to find, then why not just tell us your name? What are you hiding?

Only because we all know you're once again LYING. And since you've refused to provide the proof that you have these alleged tapes, one must conclude that you are indeed lying.

Ah! The picture becomes a bit clearer. That message, which I sent you in an email, contained the headers that were part of the message of that time (8 years ago). It would seem that your "spam cop" filter, choked on the included headers from that copied message and acted on it as if it were part of the current routing headers, which came, of course, from my current ISP. When you take the output, from my current ISP, and add in the stuff that your spam cop choked on from the 8 year old included headers, it is easy for someone, who is not to up on networking, to make the incorrect assumption that these headers all came from one place. Ok, you made an honest mistake. I'll let you slide on that one.

No, I'd say that sums up the nucleus of his actions. Whatever he did, he did because he doesn't like people like you, who have little respect for the rules of law.

Those things are pretty much what I meant, when I said: "The way in which he voiced his displeasure".

I'm sure it rattled you to some degree to realize that Doug knew where you lived. Nothing bothers someone, hiding in relative anonymity, more than to have his mask lifted. The jock strap was proof of that.

You made a supposition that Keith and Doug are "buds". A speculative comment for which you shared no corroborating evidence. I never doubted the rain report (once I saw it on the official pages), and there are people, that are in the know, that have filled me in on some of the smaller details. But your wild speculation about Keith's involement in this "caper" were both heresay, and potentially damaging. You do have this nasty habit of running your mouth (keyboard) before there is any solid evidence. All the while you expect the rest of this newsgroup to take what you spew out at face value. Sorry, but you don't have wings and you don't walk on water, so you'd better back up your accusations, if you want any credibility.

But, as usual, you're right and the world's crazy......

What goes wrong with the 2510's when the output goes to about 4 watts max, also downward swing. All 3 RF transistors check out fine. Bias resistors OK.
Thanks.

He does that quite frequently. But you have to understand that he's using WebTV, and is viewing the newsgroup on a standard 525 line TV, with a 4:3 aspect ratio, while most of us have monitors set at 1024 lines.

It's only one reason why he's so confused.

Well, it has yet to be shown that Doug is guilty of actually "jamming" the repeater in question. He has been known to have been "forceful" with certain hams on the repeater. But the jury's still out on his guilt or innocense.

> I said he was busted for jamming and other violations, Lelnad KCLDO, > once again, took issue with the messenger and claimed it wasn't true.

The fact that it was mentioned in the RAIN report was true. What it all measn is still open for debate, and the final outcome is still pending
by the FCC.

> WA3MOJ claimed it was Chuck-Eye acting as N8 to get him busted.

And this cannot possibly be true? It is a possibility, one that, I'm sure, will be investigated. One cannot deny Chuck's last meltdown on the newsgroup, not that long back, where he made some threats aimed at Doug.
Now, I don't believe in coincidences, so where does that leave us?

> .and you,,,YOU....you immediately

You're wrong as usual. I never challenged your claim that Keith E-mailed you. I challenged your speculative claim that Keith and Doug were "buds", and playing you for a fool.

> So far, you were wrong, lil geo was wrong, > and Lelnad was wrong, adn most of all DOgie was wrong for breaking

That has not been definitively established yet. Doug has not been fined, or asked to appear before any court. Should it prove to be true, then Doug is as guilty as those he lambasts on here, and will be deserving of any and all action taken against him by the FCC.

You are truly myopic, if you do not see the parallels between the gradual decline in moral values that proliferate over the radio bands (both ham and CB) and that of society in general. None are so blind as those who refuse (or are unable) to see.

Once again, show us the proof. You're blowing smoke again, living in

Back to you, as you can only sling words, you have no substance to back them up. We, on the other hand, believe in the priciples of law, and the foundation of personal responsibility for which this country was founded, long before the liberals (Not to be confused with libertarians) created the "welfare state" and started the age of dependancy, and deflection of responsibility.

Prove it. Name your resources. C'mon, don't be shy. And why would someone with a "plethora" of resources, who claims to be in the information gathering business (Talk about a hypocritical occupation for one who chastizes others for "prying" into others personal business),

No, he was cited for disturbing the peace, for interferingwith his neighbor's radio's and possibly a TV, I don't remember exactly. The key element in this case, was the gratuitous use of vulgar language. Had the language not been there, this would most likely not have resulting in a fine. He wasn't busted for technical violations stemming from his CB use, but the fact that his neighbor was being subjected to vulgarity against his will. No different than if you shouted four letter words in front of your neighbor's house at 2:00 in the morning. The CB was only the mechanism of delivery.

No kidding. It's not a part of philly, but it IS a suburb of philly.

No, Norristown is a borough. I can play semamntics too.

Maybe where you are, but where I'm from, any place that's outside the "big" city is a suburb of that city. Small towns and boroughs included.
So go spin some more.

Says you. I don't know of anyone who sees a distiction between "suburban" and "suburb of".

That's right. Suburban and suburb of are both interchangeable and outside the city limits. If it were inside city limits, it would not be suburban or a suburb of.

You have not provided one piece of corroborating evidence to back any of your wild claims. Now you outright lie and show no shame?

You are truly incorrigable.

Doug Adair didn't get popped either, his name was mentioned on the rain report that proves what? I am still waiting for the letter they are going to send him and the rule violations were if I am not mistaken you said Failure to ID and interference, isn't that what you said? >Doug Adair didn't get popped either, his name >was mentioned on the

Giving only half the information invariably changes the context and meaning and as usual you give only bits and never the entire truth.
He was mentioned on the rainreport as causing "violations". You said it was Chuck-eye trying to frame him..Lelnad undermined the law and claimed N8 was breaking the law to prevent others from breaking the law. He also claimed that N8 claims he did absolutely nothing wrong..you septic few have continuously promoted if you have nothing to fear then you have nothing to hide so how does emailing Rhollingsworth@fcc.gov and letting him know how we feel about Dogie and sharing some of his more colorful posts with him"bother" anyone, especially if there is "nothing to fear"?
Apply it across the board or don't apply it at all.

>I am still waiting for the letter they are going to >send him and the rule violations were if I am >not mistaken you said Failure to ID and >interference, isn't that what you said? Yet >there are still no reports on this... except from >you.

I never said he was RECEIVING a letter. Wait all you want..I merely answered one (I think it was you) that asked "Why are there no letters to N8"? and I responded ONLY that letters are held a week and a half per Riley's request before being published..NOWHERE did I say he was receiving a letter...matter of fact ...YOU were the one that brought up the word and subject of a "letter" from the FCC, and YOU were the one to mention the word "guilty" pertaining to N8,,not I. Once again, I claimed he was jamming (he was" and I stated there was music (I did NOT say it was him) and failure to ID..perio. Make certain you repost my post in it's entirety so no one thinks you are hacking up posts again because you have no point, merit, truth, or substance..ok? Or are you hellbent throwing away what little redemption you have left? I mean,,you seem to be really working hard at defending someone that has accused the entire ng of being gay....wait a sec..YOU do that, too.....gee...familiarity breeds contempt.

You and Twirted can't seem to read or do research. The more one looks in to the whole issue the less of an issue it gets. Doug simply complained about other operators misusing the machine. One of them taped his comments to the control operators regarding their lack of "control" on the machine, and sent it in. Funny how just the repeater trustee got a notice, not Doug. Seemed like one of the Hams that caused the problems Doug complained about was Billie Marshall (N8ORF), who BTW got kicked off another machine last fall in Toledo, the Toledo Mobile Radio Association's W8HFF machine. He received a warning letter from RH. The whole thing is mentioned in CQ VHF, winter 2003 issue, on page 60.

Twirted and you cheesy keep trying to make a mountain out of a mole hill, it isn't working. The only people you're going to convince are those without a brain, or too lazy to check the facts out for themselves.

What's the last thing you built from scratch? Not some kit...doing the design, going out, getting the parts, putting together from scratch?
My last one wasn't major...just a little solid state 6 meter amp for my FT690...wanna see a pic? I sure would like to see one of something you built.

Yeah. Sure.

Because you are a fucking twit.

First off, I requested if anyone had done these, because a few people told me to do it. Defpom also reccommended it.

Secondly, He didn't make any claims contradicting my opinion, you twit. On the antenna thread, the poster asked for antenna opinions. I gave one. You twits jumped down my throat, saying how much better the Wilson was. When I called you on it, none of you could provide info. And the only one who could answer one was SSB, and he doesn't know how to use a killfile.

In essence, I asked if someone tried it, and Cranium said he did with good results. He didn't make some bogus claim he couldn't back up.

That's the difference, you twit. Back to the chips.

Look for Icom 725 modifiable by removing one wire. Check modification sites to find mod info and photos as well. Swiss company put out Sommerkamp TX-788DX radio, all-mode [100W CW, WBFM, NBFM & SSB, 25W AM carrier] from 26.000 to 29.999 MHz in as little as 1 KHz steps. Had owner bring one to me for repair. Couldn't talk him out of it so photocopied Operating/Service Manual should I ever obtain one.

Other good radios from 70s was Communication Power Inc, CP-400/2000/2500. Built in belief FCC was going to authorize 100-channel allocation but was usable from 24.000 MHz to 30.000 MHz by using EPROMs programmed to step the on-board oscillator in 10 KHz steps. My CP-400 only had two 128-byte EPROMs so I only went 1.28 MHz below Ch. 1 and 1.28 MHz above Ch. 40. 9 watts AM and 18 watts on the SBs. With Shakespeare Big Stick from central Calif was able to barefoot it all way to Carolinas, Mexico and Alaska when skip was good.

Ummm, what was your question?

CB is 26.965 to 27.405 and 10 meters is 28.000 to 29.700. Maybe they simply mean the antenna will work well for either or both?

Jo Gunn antennas are supposed to be quite good.

This is what I would do. I am going to get my friend's climing tree stand that I hunt with, and climb up the tree I would eventually pick. You will need someone at the ground to help. You can pull up the antenna and tools with a rope. You will have to cut some limbs.

...and that's all you have too. You don't even have a copy of the so-called tapes. You don't even know what's on them. For all you know Doug could have been making jokes at your expense. On the other hand I do have the E-mails from the various parties involved, some of them rather candid, and the publicly available news about the other participant in some of the repeater problems, Billie Marshall (N8ORF), by way of a recent E-mail inqury I made to another person. I keep telling you guys to do your own research, but instead you're letting Twisted lead you down the garden path of ignorance. He doesn't care if you come out looking stupid so long as you support him at taking cheap

Well George, as a Ham you already know all that you should know about radios. But by your low standards (among others) a cb'er doesn't anything. Now the Rain report says the "Doug Adair, N8WWM was in rules violation", he spouts the same BS here, who's the hypocrite now. You'll be next George, the way you act here, has to be the same way in life.....LOL!!!!!!

Now He claims I have a Netcom account, Prodigy, AOL, Earthlink, Mindspring SBC, Now I have a SuperNews Account?
Yes, George is cracking, I make one post about Doug on the rain report ad George changes his nic three times in a 24 hour period, accuses me of 3rd gunman on the grassy know, posts forges..... all because the rain report says Doug N8WWM,,,

Now who's obsessed..... Seeing behind the dozens of posts against him.....LMAO!!!!!!

What goes around, comes around.....

While sticking the antenna up high in a tree sounds like a good idea at the moment, have you considered what happens during a good heavy thunder storm, where the trees are whipping back and forth? Now picture that large antenna on the tree. Any likely hood it will hit something like power lines etc. Better to think about that now rather than later when the antenna is laying on a 2400 VAC local distribution line. In the above case you have to consider everything that could go wrong in order to avoid an accident. Ouch!

To whom It May Concern on this group. Yeah I do give out advice or good information when I see a legitimate question that doesn't involve illegal operations.

Mark, Ill talk to you like a normal human for once, take a step back if one of your cb gang was mentioned you all would be screaming that he is innocent until proven guilty, oh the rain report isn't a court of law, the FCC can't do this or that, if you say anything different than you know what geo you might be right, it would be an out and out lie. Face it it has given you guys something to get back at doug with for all his tormenting, and you won't let an opportunity like this pass you by, no matter what the outcome or the results. Twisty has went so far as to telling us what the rules violations are funny part is there has never been mention anywhere of them. But it is easy and fashonable to sit here and say doug was popped to say otherwise without knowing anything but speculation would hurt your agenda and leave you guys without any hope.

Correct, but if he was flooding the group with the BS he been doing for years, I wouldn't defend him.
Example, if Dave got popped, I would most likely ignore the thread.

> oh the rain report isn't a court of law, the FCC can't

I've already said it's up to the FCC, you didn't see that? I'm not saying he's guilty of anything other than what the rain report said.

Face it it has given you >guys something to get back at doug with for all his tormenting, and you

Yup, why not, he's been as big a troll as you, posts nothing of any usefulness, foul language, porn etc etc etc, old news. But when it comes to the ham radio, he was a saint, he made lots of claims to that, but he obviously acts the same way in life
as on the newsgroup

> Twisty has went so far as to telling us what the rules >violations are funny part is there has never been mention anywhere of them.

Don't know don't care, that his obsession, not mine.

>But it is easy and fashonable to sit here and say doug was popped to say >and leave you guys without any hope.

On the contrary, I couldn't care less what happens to him.
I can not make the FCC do something they don't want too, that is their job to seek the truth and dish out the proper punishment for the crime. Just the fact that you, amongst other come to the defense of Doug is the problem.
I might come to a few peoples defense, but why isn't Bert, Jerry, SideBand, Jay, Eitner and other hams here coming to his defense? Because he's a troll, why should they associated themselves with a known newsgroup troublemaker and possible Fcc violator.

"Mark, Ill talk to you like a normal human for once"

So are you finally admitting you've been a troll for the past few years? Start posting normal?
Hope so, but I Doubt. it :(we'll see.....

No one was busted, you keep saying that show me something in writing that says Doug Adair N8WWM has some charges or rule violations against him. And btw, Mark, amateur rules are different than CB rules one is part 95 the other Part 97. so your cornfused

So your judgement is biased then you have a motive for saying things about Doug whether they are true or not.
When you see his name on a NAL then you can say he was popped and I want you to say it Loud and Proud, he deserves what he gets, but so far he is not guilty of anything with the FCC

How is it obvious Mark? What were the fine's or charges levied against him for you to say he acts the same way on the radio as the Ng? Can you post where he said he was a saint?

Why don't you ever tell him that? Is it because he is on you guys side?

> On the contrary, I couldn't care less what happens to him.

Bullcrap Mark, you as well as all the keyclowns want him to go down, I don't blame you he has been a thorn in your side, you would feel some sense of satisfaction knowing he was a FCC rule violator.

> I can not make the FCC do something they don't want too,

Mark what is it they don't want to do, now all of a sudden they are not gonan wanna bust Doug? why because he is AKC Ringleader he gets a free pass??

>that is their job to seek the truth and dish out the

If a crime was commited, you can rest assured they have his name and number you will know about it with a NAL letter.

>Just the fact that you, amongst other come to the defense of Doug is the problem.

Ahh the axis of evil we are finally at the root of it, I am not defending Dougs actions i do know more about the situation than you perhaps but If he did something wrong he deserves to be dealt with accordingly. Does that sound like I am defending him, I also said this same exact thing last week. No Mark, the problem I have is the same as you just as you amongst others come to attact Doug is the problem.

> I might come to a few peoples defense, but why isn't Bert,

I am not defending Doug He is a big boy and does so on his own. I am challenging your actions. Your jumping on the hopes he was "busted" Guys are all walking around with your chests all puffed out LOL the last laugh is on you guys there is no FCC action being taken on Doug.

> Jerry, SideBand, Jay, Eitner and other hams here coming to his defense?

Eitner he is a ham by convenience he is a keyclown who works on keyclown equipment, Jay is another keyclown with a License, why not mention toll free as well 3 guys who havent posed here in how long?

>Because he's a troll,

so is mopar twisty, vinnie, rcranium

What about the conductive coating on the back of the CRT? This coating, with the glass of the CRT, makes a great capacitor... storing the 25,000 volts EHT long after switch off.
More signal would be radiated through the cheap plastic cases they use now.

But, even with the Tin Foil around a TV, signal from the local osc will get sent up the antenna lead. I cannot see sheilding the antenna being a useful idea... LOL.

They did claim in adverts on TV that they were using the handheld devices for such situations.

I would agree with that. At least they would have to show someting decent to keep their ratings reasonable.
I wonder how much it costs them a year to deal with licensing (dealt with by Royal Mail, our Post Office), and to enforce the system. I wonder just how much of the money obtained goes to the Post Office to cover their fees for dealing with all of that.

We had UHF, but it was withdrawn as we did not use it. Back then, the equipment cost too much.

True.
Even if you only watch satelite TV, BBC gain from the popularity of the system.
And if you use a TV to watch videos or with a computer (now an old system) or a Playstation, that also needs a TV licence. The licence fee even applies to using scanners that work on the TV frequencies, even though you have no picture.

I believe that you can get out of it if the set is modified to use only composite video, with the tuner removed or disabled... it would no longer be a TV receiver, just a monitor. I have heard of people wanting the colour disabled, so the TV would only need a monochrome licence, which is much cheaper.

> Which, if they were allowed to advertise, then Britian could get rid of > the TV licensing scheme.

This is the point being considered... do they advertise or continue with the licence.
As things are, the BBC can show any crap they like, you have to pay them even if you only watch the other stations. Those using adverts have to pull in the ratings to be able to justify the cost of advertising.

> > In other words, if we choose to watch a programme on the BBC, even a > > three hour movie, we would see it totally uninterrupted...

Not even for a break in which to make a drink.
One good thing about the adverts is that it does give you time to get a drink and more popcorn.

It is true that they can do this however, in the UK, standards are making this system useless.
At one time, receivers could throw out as much crap as they wanted... but not any more. Standards are now stating how much signal a receiver is allowed to radiate. The amount of oscillator signal escaping must now be lower, making detection very dificult, if not impossible.
They continue the "you will be detected" scare tactics, but the truth is that they assume that you have a TV, and threaten anyone without a licence.
Whether you have a TV or not, if you have no licence, you will get a "You are breaking the law" notice through your door. And yes, the wording is just that... "you are breaking the law", they assume that you have a TV.

Why anyone with an HF privileged ham license, would risk losing it by freebanding, is something I just don't get. You might hear different people, but the DX is no better than on any of the other ham bands. I guess this just proves that there are many hams that succumb to the forces of the dark side. Those are the ones that make the RAIN report.

It's pretty darn hypocritical of someone to consistantly put down hams and ham radio, when they themselves are one. That would be a greater reason to not admit to it.

It's also hypocritical, when one claims that "this is a CB forum, we don't care about hammie radio" and then turn around and bring up every relevant infraction that occurs on ham radio, as some sort of excuse, or justification, for all the illegal operation that occurs on the CB and adjacent bands. All this while also basking in the apparent joy of a ham being cited for an alleged rule violation, all the while breaking federal law by operating an 11 meter radio on frequencies, and at power levels, not authorized by the FCC. That's like a murderer laughing at a bank robber for getting popped. I guess there really isn't any honor among crooks...

You're a reasonable guy Bert, doesn't that seem to be a double standard to you?

> > No, No, and No. So what are they learning from the rain report?
> Maybe they're keeping tabs on the level of 11-meter enforcement?

I wish there was more of that. But since the RAIN report deals primarily with ham radio, it is unlikely that 11 meter action would be mentioned unless it was a high profile case, or the "freebander" was also a ham.

> ARE these folks doing here?

It's a shame that this newsgroup has degenerated to this level. It was much better when we talked about antennas, different rigs, trips down memory lane, interesting mods, and the often volitile, correcting "CB science", and myths. There was enough good information passed around from many who were knowledgable, to make it a good learning tool. It's just a shame that many let their socio-political feelings get in the way of this, and forced us into drawing lines and taking sides, or bowing out altogether.

"Overstating legalities", as you put it, is a direct reaction to outlaws who flaunt their illegalities as some sort of badge of honor. I know people like to feel a sense of accomplishment, but bragging about working X amount of states or countries, while operating illegally, is nothing to really brag about. It's like bragging about making $200K a year, by selling dope to 10 year old kids. Living in a civilized society means that there are rules to follow. Those who follow the rules, and achieve, deserve praise. Those who cheat the rules, and achieve something, deserve nothing but contempt.

While I personally, am not a fan of DXing, I can appreciate the allure that it holds for others. The HF ham bands offer all sorts of DX opportunities, even when the sunspots are low. There is no real reason why, someone who likes to DX, shouldn't get a ham license and do it. Excuses about personality types, and structure, are just that. Why someone would choose to remain an illegal 11 meter freebander, when ham radio is available, says basically two things. They are either unable to pass the test (Or don't even want to go through the effort to try), or they just like being a "bad citizen", for whatever psychological reason. Or maybe it's government paranoia.....

Well, Mark, you are certainly welcome to go to any of the ham groups and attempt to extol the virtues of freebanding, excessive power, and why people who break the rules are "more fun". I won't guarantee a warm reception, but you can certainly try.

> You should already

I know you're talking to George here, but remember that once you get a ham license, that doesn't mean that you lose interest in CB. I still have both and still use both.

This alleged "bust" not withstanding, the rules are still the rules, no matter how many guys get busted for not obeying them. It doesn't diminish the validity of what's been stated.

Interesting that you would find FCC enforcement of the rules, so fufilling, when you yourself, run the risk of someday being on the wrong side of the bench. Why is it that many of you find that the rules are fine for everyone else, yet you selectively break those that you don't agree with?

The real problem here is separating what Doug has done here, from what he's done on the air. Yea, I understand that because of the way Doug has portrayed himself here, you (and many others) would love to see him eat dirt, as it were. But, the thing is, in your desire to see this guy go down, you're selling your own principles short to do it. If you guys are truly believers in illegal radio operation, the fact that FCC action to another would give you pleasure, is hypocritical.

Food for thought?

You MUST be a headless Keyclown... No brain attached... It is NOT a "RADAR Detector". It's a CB Radio that had TWO sets of 40 Channels. IE, had two channel knobs, and two different channel displays. You could monitor two channels at one time... Mindless idiot...

Do a search of eBay's completed items, you find at least 4 units that last time I checked... Some with pictures just to make YOU happy. Funniest looking "RADAR Detector" I've ever seen, I didn't know they made them with 40-channels...

Correct, but if he was flooding the group with the BS he been doing for years, I wouldn't defend him. Example, if Dave got popped, I would most likely ignore the thread.

>So your judgement is biased

That isn't ok? Why, y'all are getting back what y'all gave....if you don't like it, don't treat others in that manner..the idea that you are defending this piece of swine saysmuch,,,,I think for the first time ever you are about to get ignored like Sparky did before he bowed out when he realized he was flapping his gums and no one was listening....the insults have been flying faster and more frequent form you and Hall over N8...you'll both do well to be reminded that your lack of communication skills are magnificently being illustrated to hammies worldwide..and I don't mean here..better start pokin' around.

>then you have a motive for saying things >about Doug whether they are true or not.

Neither is the entire group that N8 and N3CVJ refer to as federal criminals..what is this? Doogie is innocent even though Lelnad admits he broke the law, even though Riley says he committed violations, but the rest of us are guilty of federal crimes because "HAll and N8 say so"....what a LuLu, geo.......surely you see your faulty logic doesn't at all..perhaps youare deriving more pleasure from such things taught you by Hall and Nad????.

Yeah. I find advice not to put an antenna in the vicinity of high voltage power line, helpful advice. No one ever thinks of that. I am sure the warnings in the instructions and pure common sense, don't apply here. He needed you for it.

Close Power House....It is a split frequency capable radio..that is, you can transmit on one channel and listen on another...drives people crazy cause they have to dial to one channel to talk to you and change to another to hear you...otherwise just put both on the same channel and you have a regular radio.

No different than erecting one on your roof,,,,safety is always priority basis when camping, and many ops in Fla use fiberglass sticks way up in trees........fasten it right and it will last through a hurricane.

I wonder if they're going to stick the antenna at the very top? Would a pine tree be strong enough to support a CB antenna, say a vertical 1/4 wave ground plane? I'm thinking that if the tree isn't strong enough at the very top then they'd need to mount the antenna lower than the top of the tree, which may degrade performance.

Personally I'd prefer a nice, tall tower, but we all have to make do with what we have.

If the tree is big enough to climb to the top, then yes.

When I lived in No Ca, I saw this everywhere with large TV antennas. Much more wind load there, and the added weight of a rotor. Just top the tree, and mount the hardware.

And wear a GOOD climbing belt!

Hello John:

Many guys have tree climbers who install a antenna in a tall tree. It usually works pretty good.

I have seen them attached to a 10 or 20 foot pipe so that the antenna can be mounted above the top of the tree. Good luck.

I mount the antenna to a 10' mast. Then I use large hose clamps to attach the mast to the tree. This will let the antenna go just over the top of the tree. The longer the mast the better. A 10' mast should be a minimum. I use at least 5 hose clamps. If you can't find hose clamps large enough most hardware stores will order them for you. The antennas I have put up like this have stayed up though many big storms. Always keep the power lines in mind when you are deciding antenna placement.

Well I am familiar with Georgia too. Had family in Rome Ga. years ago.
Rome is about an hour or so drive north west of Atlanta. Went back last fall for a quick vacation. The wolf statue out in front of city hall was a gift from the town's sister city Rome Italy. Place has grown up a bit. It has a big mall on the north side of town now. Cedar Springs to the south is still nice. Stopped and got some free spring water right from the source. Walk across the bridge from the parking lot, ponds on the right, and the spring is flowing out of a grate at the base of the hill in to small basin that spills over in to the pond. The gate was locked so I couldn't go inside to see the spring proper, next time maybe.

Sgt, If your intention is to get the antenna up higher to get out further, there comes a point of diminishing returns, where the work involved and the additional loss from extra coax will not improve performance especially at this frequency if it was uhf/vhf frequency height would be might. put it up 36 feet you will not notice a big difference by going much higher

I have a 2000 Chevy truck that I recently purchased used. It has a CB antenna mount but is missing the antenna. I would like to use this mount since it's already drilled through the roof of the cab and the wires are well hidden. This poses 2 problems.

1. The mount is unlike anything I have ever seen. I may need to post a pic, but it's about 1.5" round, threaded no the outside, with a flat metal contact surface in the middle. I have the cap that goes on the mount and it screws on about 5 turns with a tab in the center that has decent tension pressing on the contact surface. I then has a rubber flange to hold the antenna. The opening in the rubber flange is about 1/16". Is this a standard CD mount? All the antennas I see that have this mount are not the correct frequency for citizens band. Can it be used?

2. The end connector at the end of the cable is frayed badly. Can these ends be replaced? I have heard that any cutting of the wire (to cut the old connector off) will cause problems due to the shorter length.

Thanks again for the help and sorry for the lack of info.

It might be for a UHF (400-900MHZ) antenna.

Unless the coax is used as a tuning stub, coax length does not matter.

Hello Scott:

There's a few guys that have their Interceptor 10K mounted in tree's, but they use a 12 to 24 Foot mast, usually thick walled Aluminum Tubing.
Like 2 inch OD with a 1/4 inch wall thickness.

There's a Interceptor 10K mounted on a tower, which is near the Tehachapi Mountains, near Mojave California, that constanly is tested for high winds and such. Its near where all the Wind Mill Generators are, that are seen on TV and the Movies.

http://www.A1antennas.com/

The I-10K photos show a Interceptor at 80 MPH winds. Its still up and working.

Sounds like an "NMO" mount, or Motorola, commonly used with VHF-UHF. The mount itself will be ok for CB, but you'll need an antenna for 27 Mhz. The Larsen NMO 27 will do fine......or any other with the Motorola type mount/thread. Good luck.

If that's what you want to think, go for it. My point was that if I constantly lambasted people, every other word was a swear word, flood the ham group with porn, they too would jump with Joy about me getting accused of something in the rain report.

Yes you do and have said so. At the Same time Leland has said that the cb band is a sewer and people using it are no better than it. George constantly bashes cb'ers calling them low life's, scum etc etc etc.
So why are they here if they hate the cb so much?

Really? while I have a lot of equipment, since I moved some three plus years ago, I haven't had a base since moving, the wife now has the Truck, so no radio there,
I don't like her car, so no radio in there.

Hey, I speed but the chances are something along the lines of 350 or 450 to one before you get a ticket.
At the some time, it's a $250,000.00 fine to make copies of video or dvd's, but people do it everyday.

Not really, as I said, I don't have a problem with you or Leland or even Frank. While you and the fore mentioned don't like "cb pirates" you didn't do what Doug did and is still doing as of the other day.

Derek the mount is a NMO as the other post said also. That will work fine. You can have your coax ANY length. Cutting the bad end off and installing a PL-259 is fine.

I am just starting to look at CB's and was curious whether a typical CB integrates scanners into them (police, emergency services, etc.) If not (typically) are there specialized models that do?

Yes, I understand that you disagree with Doug's alleged methods (as do I), and dont care for him personally. But don't you understand that by rejoicing in his potential legal quagmire, you are, in essense, saying, that you're glad that the law works for people like Doug, yet you feel no shame in violating it yourself. Can't you see the hypocricy in that?

I would agree with Lelands assessment of CB as it currently exists in most major metro areas. The type of people, who made CB fun and interesting for me for the first half of my 32 years, are, for the most part, no longer there. What's left are people who are more interested in saying "look at me", as they show off with noise toys, echo boxes, souped up radios etc. It's all about making a statement, rather than developing a community of friends to chat casually about whatever. I still hold out hope that once cycle 23 is in the toilet (and I'm counting the days), that some decent people might poke their noses out of the holes and get back on again. I know we had some pretty dedicated folks on there for a while. I'm hoping they show up again.

Point being is that I don't think that any of us hate CB, but rather we dispise a certain element of selfish, inconsiderate, individuals that have taken over and ruined what used to be a good thing.

Ok, so your risk is low. But the principle stands.

So you're saying that it's ok to break a law, if your chances of getting caught are slim? Maybe that's what Osama though when he plotted his terrorist activities? Yea, I know, unfair comparison and scare tactic, but the principle's the same.

That's a whole other issue. One that the multi-media industry has yet to come to terms with. Expect major changes on this in the coming years.

I have been posting here exactly the same now, since 1996. I don't have "multi nics". I have not seen most of the alleged "spam" stuff because I skip over posts that have no value (Like those in all caps that claim
"so and so sucks goats" or whatever).

Doug may have made some enemies (And the jury's still out on whether or not these people deserved what they got), but that is still no reason to disregard due process, because he's someone you personally don't like.

I'm not "sticking up for Doug" as much as I'm saying don't jump to conclusions based on one RAIN report.

No, those types of activities are immature, and are not a part of my

A point of clarification. I truly don't mind people who bend the rules a bit. I have a bigger problem with ego-maniacs and others who jam and spoil the fun for many others who are peacefully minding their business.

There aren't any that I know of that integrate a scanner into a CB. There are scanners however that let you monitor the CB channels... No transmitting, just receiving... Probably not what you are looking for by the sounds of it, but thought I'd let you know anyway...

Yeah, I guess it was, but it was also them who proved it wasn't me, remember Jason Halverson .
Frank at least used a cb, didn't say that cb'er's are useless, 11 meters is a sewer. Though Leland's defending Doug, trolling with posts about 11 meters being taken away from cb'ers, at least he doesn't do the same crap as Doug & George.
I'm beginning to think it was George all along, Frank's not here, but George still persists with the same BS posts. Oh well, some things will probably

Well Dave, you have been here almost as long as I. You remember when it was tech talk? Antenna talk? Yes, linear talk, but at least it was some form of tech talk. Not like the BS posts that are being made by a few people now.
Even the hams that didn't agree with linears still posted tech about radio's & antennas, while avoiding questions about linears. They didn't come out here and spew part 95 some 5 to 10 times a day or start flooding the newsgroup with porn, sending e mail virus's.
So you wonder why people that have been here for years despise Doug, you don't see any irony in the fact that the person that would flood the group with 30 to 50 posts a day from MIBX, along with help from a couple others gets mentioned on the rain report for willful violations of a repeater.
Rules broken by the person that spewed "we are all rule breakers".

Hello ..:

If prices of the I-10K Antenna was the only consideration, then sure you betcha.

But I have to pay for all the expensive aircraft grade materials, machinery, tooling, Saw blads, drills, Deburring tools, SS hardware, and time spent to make the antennas. Then I get to box all the antennas and then ship them out.
The price as compared to the costs, is a good deal.

Testing, I have compared a hand full of the current antennas, as compared to the Interceptor 10K. And the I-10K is a few dB hotter than even the old Hy-Gain Penetrator 500 Antenna. This is due to the very low loss Impedance Matching Network, and Elevated Vertical Element design.
My tests, and tests done by prototype users are very close. And are echoed by customers.

This sounds like an NMO mount, which is usually used with VHF/UHF antennas.
I'm not sure if any CB antennas use these or not, but there probably are some that do.

The length of the cable won't matter. And just taking off one connector and replacing it won't significantly alter the length.

Yes, that sounds like what I have. Like I said all the antennas that

Couple of points I notice no one else has addressed:

Trees grow at the top, not from the bottom, so if you're going to mount an antenna on a tree you should climb it until it won't support you (or just before that point) and "top" it (cut off the remaining portion of tree). That way the top bit of tree won't continue growing and damage the antenna in a few years. The tree will "bush" out, but not get any taller.

Personally, I wouldn't put an Antron 99 in such a location. The top section of an Antron is weak and will bend or even break quite easily, and it would be quite a project to replace it. (I see quite a few A99s with bent top pieces.) Even a Big Stick would be better atop a tree, although my personal preference would be a good-old 5/8th groundplane for the best range!

Not exactly true. You won't notice much difference for a ways above 36-feet, but if you can get to 72-feet you will. Why else would those licensed hams put up 200-foot towers for their antennas? "The higher, the better" is a standard rule of thumb with antennas, and the hams with the highest antennas effectively make their own openings. Agreed, there is a "legal" limit for CB antennas (60-feet above ground), but that's not the point of the discussion.

They use 200 foot towers because of the frequency they use a full wave at 27 mhz wave is 36 ft, a full wave on 80 meters/ 3 .5 mhz is 130 feet, If they used VHF /UHF then 200 feet is what you want for line of sight,. At 27 Mhz you will not notice the differnece

Why are you including hams in this scenario they are not the point of discussion either, this is a cb antenna try to stay on topic. Hams use multiple frequencies from dc to microwave the need for towers exists for them, uhf/vhf no doubt requires the highest antenna possible, but at 27 mhz it sure doesn't, and the added cost, work and Coax losses from going higher doesn't always make up for the amount of gain one gets by raising the antenna. People who use ground radials and put the antenna up 100 feet, at that height will find the ground radials are useless. Funny thing is with dx conditions the ionosphere plays the factor not how high Joe Ham has his antenna.

Hey .., do want hype or quality? Do you want "9.9Dbi" of a half-wave dipole, or do you want the proven performance of the 5/8 wave ground plane with Jay's

No thanks I build my own 5/8, I don't have to worry about any hurricanes

I'm looking for an antenna for my 95 Dodge ram. I like the Wilson 1000 with the magnet mount but I also sometimes have a fiberglass and aluminum truck camper on leaving no space for the Wilson on the truck cab roof. thought about running a pair of co-phased 3' Wilson fiberglass whips using a GM sport mirror mount. I'm only running 4 watts power and maybe tweaking it to 20 watts. just looking for some advise and/or any testimonials on antennas.
Thank You,
Mike

Or better yet, create some good public transportation systems driving their own automobile.

I get lucky. I don't ever pay for gas for my company vehicle, and have full personal use. My wife's truck is a different story, but she don't drive much anyway.

Not really... The radio receives on two frequencies at once, transmits on one or the other, depending on which of the tuners is selected as the transmitting tuner. Split frequency operation infers receiving on one frequency, transmitting on the other. Since the Whistler 900 cannot be receive inhibited on the transmitting tuner (I refuse to use the term VFO), it is technically NOT a split frequency operation. Granted, it could be used that way, but the normal method of operating this radio is receive/transmit on one channel while monitoring a second channel.

At least that's how I use mine...

"Pot shot"? Not at all. I can tell the difference between an antenna just barely over the roof and one on a 90 foot tower, just by who they hear and who can hear them. Same neighborhood, but some get out.

The guy with the antenna just over the roof needs a box, the megaphone does not.

No one said anything about a antenna just barely over a rooftop, I told the original poster 36 foot high then you called me a appliance operator, and now you try to muddy the conversation by now talking about an antenna just over a rooftop. Guess you never thought your antenna just barely over the rooftop was having it's signal block, I mean come on it is not even a apples for apples conversation.

Where did any of this come from did I mention anything about a antenna just over the rooftop?
See above.

Who are those licensed hams? The guys who talk on 80/160 meters who are looking to get their antennas a wavelength or so off the ground. ? The same reason Cbers put 10 alternators on vehicles.

Um, don't go with the crimp-on types, put a solder-on plug on it. It will

No. "Peaked" usually is on par with "butchered." Your radio should work fine straight out of the box. I'd suggest not listening to anyone who tells you that you need to have it "peaked and tweaked." You won't notice any significant difference if your radio is turned up to 5 or 6 watts as opposed to the standard 4. Plus, the screwdriver tech might make things all out of line to the point you splatter across all 40 channels.

Yes, I miss that greatly. I miss Dennis O, Bill E, Sean, Amor Powers, Handy Andy, and a few others who had obvious knowledge. We used to hash out some decent topics, and dispelled alot of "CB Myths" (My favorite was still the guy who claimed he could make a DF loop unidirectional, by spraying teflon on one side of it). It was much better than now, were the majority of posts are slamming people for something.

> Not like the BS posts that are

My attitude was, if you're determined to ignore the rules, at least do it with quality equipment and a decent understanding of what it is that you're playing with. Usually that involved unlearning bad habits like clipping limiters and peaking radios beyond their design limits. If you're going to run an amp, make sure it's not a class "C". Use proper filters, and provide a good RF ground. Keep your neighbors happy, and chances are you won't have any problems.

> They didn't
> come out here and spew part 95 some 5 to 10

I think what pushed me firmly in the "legal" camp was that the issue was forced into a black and white issue. While I tended to ignore small rule infractions, from people with good engineering sense, and people who didn't make a nuisance of themselves on the band, the issue became, "you either believe in, and follow the rules, or you break them". I couldn't resolve the obvious hypocricy in trying to ride the fence on this one, and I couldn't endorse the type of behavior that many flagrent illegal operators engage in.
What really pushed me over the edge were accusation from illegals claiming that somehow, they were in the right, and those who advocate following the law, were the "bad guys". Call us sticks in the mud, no fun at parties, straight laced, geeks, nerds, or whatever, but people who follow the law are on the right side of society, no matter how much someone tries to disagree.
There is a process to have rules and laws changed. If enough people agree, then it gets voted on and became a part of our culture. You don't just break laws, and then act surprised when others want to see you become another statistic in the criminal justice system.

> So you wonder why people that have been > here for years despise Doug,

I've been here for over 9 years now, and while I don't despise Doug (He never did anything to me), I can't agree with his methods. But I guess, in a way, I understand why he did what he did. It's the old, "drive 'em crazy enough, and they'll leave" rationale. In an unmoderated newsgroup, no one can force another to stop posting, so the only recourse is to make the environment so inhospitable, that people get tired and leave. To a great extent, it worked. You don't see Train, Toll Free, or many of the other big amp guys posting on here with as much regularity. But like Chemotherapy kills good cells as well as cancer cells, Doug's "work" drove away alot of interesting people too. Some would say that what's left here are the true nut cases (Myself included) for hanging in here and dealing with this nonsense.

> you don't see any

It's a great irony, if true. But like you said earlier, Doug made a lot of enemies, and it's not beyond the realm of possibilities, that one or more of them, have attempted to "set up" Doug for this "crime", especially considering the irony of the "Caped law enforcer" getting busted for breaking the law. Considering that some of Doug's more vocal enemies, live within a reasonable distance of his home area, the idea of framing him is not all that hard to believe. I'm not saying Doug's in the running for the "man of the year" award, but he deserves the same consideration and due process as anyone else accused of a crime.

Yes, Laff-a-lott made the Telsat 50, 150 and 450. A 23 channel radio with a tunable monitor, that could manually tune anywhere in the specific public service band (30-50, 150-170, 420-470, depending on radio model). A lot of fire police guys had them in my area, back then. They were good for the guys to monitor their fire band channel, while they coordinated their tactical comms over CB. Of course that was 30 years ago, when CB was still usable for such things, and you didn't have to worry about sociopathic idiots looking to "squash mudducks".

I see some of you are still making Mark Fuller famous. The funny thing is that all this debate has done nothing in regards to changes on 11 meters. Threats, gay posts and old news still seem to be the way to go in this newsgroup. About a year ago I gave up on this group. I should have seen the writing on the wall when the guy that works for Lucent (I think) was written up behind posts in this group.

I wonder how some of you even find time to talk on the radio. I guess this is what some people enjoy doing, fighting and arguing. I see this on the radio all the time.
Ever wonder why guys get those big ass pumps? It's so they can talk over the agitators. I remember when 5 watts was enough. Now 5k isn't and 50k is the norm. Personally, I think 11 meters is lost. You can take it away on paper but guys I know are not going to stop using thousands of dollars worth of equipment just because the FCC says so. Look at the average station 10 years ago: antenna height, modified radio, too much power, Splatter and long winded. these were violations then and they are now. Now, you can multiply all of these by a factor of 10. Those that don't want to hear it either turn on everything or turn off everything. Like I said, If nothing changes, nothing changes.

See ya next year,

Miles

Jay,
I've checked out your site and I am very impressed with the quality, and the performance claims of this antenna. You've designed a real winner. But I have to echo the sentiments of the previous poster. I guess I'm still stuck in the time frame where you could by a 5/8th antenna at Rat Shack for $39.95. Yes, I know that the law has made good metal antennas scarce, and that imports and the high demand have caused the prices to rise exponentially (In the 70's, you paid $60 for a good antenna, and $300 for a good radio. Today it's the opposite)

I can understand from the business side, that you don't make enough volume, to afford to buy supplies in bulk at a discounted price. This makes your overhead high. But considering that you could buy a decent beam for the price of the I-10K, you might be pricing yourself out of the market, unless your customers are truly interested in only an omni antenna, and price is no object.

On the otherhand, if the quality and durability of this antenna is as stated, it will be well worth it for those few who demand high performance, and those who live in severe weather areas.

That's not a sound strategy. Think about this; oil is a finite resource, which WILL run out some day. Would you rather use up other people's oil, or our own? Keeping our own reserves intact will allow us to be less affected when the true shortages do happen.

I monitor this site, to let me know how the price of crude and the wholesale price of gas is heading.

http://oilnergy.com

The situation that we are in, is due mainly to "pre-war jitters" and speculation about shortages in oil supply if/when we go to war in Iraq.
There is also a strike in Venezuela, which has their oil production output running at about 50% of normal. We have also had a colder that normal winter in the nothern part of the country, which has placed higher demand on heating oil, which diverts refinery capacity away from making gasoline, which decreases supply and forces up the price.

I've heard that once the situation in Iraq is resolved, and the Venezuelan situation is taken care of, that the price will plummet. I can only hope this happens by the time boating season arrives. I can burn 70 gallons of gas in one day, and at $1.50 a gallon, that's about a C-note just to fill the tank......ouch!

It depends. $15 is not all that bad. Some of the cost is materials. Some is an actually paying a shipping person. It's ebay that's a ripoff. I saw an HR-2510

Jay, how often do you buy deburring tools? every antenna? ..LOL, how many drill bits do you use per antenna, your drilling aluminum? If you can't make at least 5 or 10 antennas with a drill bit and a saw blade then your doing got a Thunder 27 from Sirio. Smaller than i expected...

Hi,

Unfortunately the manual is missing and can't find any instructions on net.

http://www.sirioantenne.it/prodotti_ant.php?idc=1008171241&idg=1008171169&idp=64

Connected it to my TRX and turned the antenna tuner on to see how fine is it. The first thing was the loud noise on my stereo (it was turned off!). Tack tack tack tack ...

How i should handle this antenna, any suggestions?

For best range in all directions, you definitely want to go with a 5/8ths. The old StarDusters weren't all that well made, anyhow; I see a lot of them still up but with parts missing (one has the entire top section missing! have to assume they don't use it anymore). I haven't been overly impressed with Maco in general, but they are easy to come by. I'd be concerned about the longevity of thin-wall aluminum tubing;
it's a hassle to pull one down and repair it every so many years.
There's one (maybe Sigma?) made in Italy for about $50 that works well and appears to be better made.

If you can come up with a matching network, you could probably build one out of stronger materials that would outlast them all!

That ad wasn't on eBay. For a Radio Shack 200-memory scanner $15 does seem a bit high, although insurance on the item is a good idea no matter how it gets shipped. (I bet he doesn't have a shipping & receiving department to pay for.) But if someone agrees to pay it hey, that's "America"!!

BTW, IIRC it cost the seller about $12 to ship my '2510 by Priority Mail!

Hell, we had 10K agitators 4 years ago. The solution is simple. Conditions are still conditions, either you got it or you don't. Turn it all on or turn it all off. Crying about it doesn't work.

In my lower-than-dirt cber opinion, I feel that when the seller is making money off the shipping, in many cases, it has a tendency to sour the deal. I find it advantageous to figure the price one wishes to get, add shipping cost ONLY, then include it in the asking price and say in your ad, "Includes shipping."

When one begins buying in bulk, the percentage of flawed materials always increases. These here antennas are nuthn' but the finest..you want better? Precious metals.....

>This makes your overhead high. But >considering that you could buy a decent beam >for the price of the I-10K, you might be pricing >yourself out of the market, unless your >customers are truly interested in only an omni >antenna, and price is no object.

You said it yourself,,a "decent" beam. This is a matter of quality over quantity..the antenna you refer to isn't a "decent" antena by Jay,,it is a "most excellent" antenna.

I know someone using one of Jay's antennas. It's not as old as mine, but after years and years of use, that's a CHEAP yearly cost for full time entertainment. Just for the record,,there are way more than a "few" that demand high performance..give a listen to the bowl for a small and immediate example.

This doesn't apply to hemp oil fuel or the myriads of alternative-fuel engines that have been invented. The real reason it will never happen is the feds need us to be addicted to fossil fuels. Did you read Bush' proposed economic policy proposal? Think it's a coincidence that businesses can purchase ONLY SUVs and get a write off up to 80 percent of the cost? The catch? To get 80 percent of the cost returned, one must purchase the Hummer, or pricey SUV equivelant. The less the cost of the SUV, the less you can write off. Big business and OIL!!

Here, too. We don't have gas (a few have propane), it's mostly all electric.....we're used to paying these high bills in the summer for A/C, but we ran the heat more this "winter" than we have in around 15 years. Bills are equal to summer time.

>I've heard that once the situation in Iraq is >resolved, and the Venezuelan situation is >taken care of, that the price will plummet.

I hope you;re right..but I'm cynical. I guess it depends on ones view of "resolved". I don't think a long term occupation as resolving this dilemma. I do see a pro-longed American presence, a structural rebuild (if we bomb the hell outta them) all at tax dollar expense.

Yep, last week I saw a station advertising regular gas at $1.819 and high test at $198.9. This was unusually high; I just bought 8 gallons or so for $15.00 yesterday. It is going up around 3 cents per day here. Natural gas is going up (some 20% or so in a matter of weeks). I forget what diesel is going for, but the truckers are up in arms (and I can't blame them). What we need are more SUVs. We import something like 75% of our oil and there are more than a few folks that want to take advantage of that fact.

You don't have to have a tower to install a beam, you don't need a thrust bearing either unless you have a tower, guy wires for any antenna are usually a good idea, you mention cable 2x you still need cable ? coax for a omni. Of course you need a rotor unless you want you antenna to poitn in one general direction. Hell a pdl2 will work on a tv rotor and has vertical and horizontal polarity and probably weighs less or about the same as Jays's omni.. Go wash off

How do you know where i needed to go? Are you my travel planner? I went down 95 to 295 to rt 1 to 895 to Greenbelt, MD took 95 North to rt 140 north back home, met a friend from Pasadena just outside Glen Burnie, In heading into laurel. Are you gonna meet me next time I am in Md?

If you're gonna go beam, why go halffast?

If you're gonna go omni, why go halffast?

You seem to have a lot of money to burn and don't care
if you have to do it 3 or 4 times until you get it right.
You'll find out we told you before you started.

You know what you know, but you're no expert. You should

So what route did you take from 95 to 140? That's a long gap if you took 140 into PA. That also takes you way west from the 95 corridor.

Just face it, you're busted! <g>

How you figure that? One of the things that had been constantly argued against N8's position was that everything isn't cut and dry, black and white, like he claimed.

you don't see any
irony in the fact that the person that would flood the group with 30 to 50 posts a day from MIBX, along with help from a couple others gets mentioned on the rain report for willful violations of a repeater. Rules broken by the person that spewed "we are all rule breakers".

You feel the FCC is lax when they claim one is in violation? When the FCC officially says a hammie did something wrong, they usually have an overwhelming or abundance of evidence. Believe it, if he were innocent, he would have a case of slander AND libel for making him out to be a "violator" of FCC rules when he was not, as it would be a detriment to his sterling reputation as a hammie in the publics eye.

No he doesn't. You perfectly illustrated the irony of referring to one as a criminal for rule violations. He wasn't accused of a crime, he was accused of a violation. Due process has nothing to do with it.

Maybe for a 1/2-wave radials will be useless, but for anything else they are necessary, Georgie-girl, no matter what the height above ground.

Well that's certainly one way of looking at it. However, more likely, the complaint was withdrawn because there was either insufficient evidence, or it was shown that Doug was not the person doing the jamming.

I'm not trying to split hairs here, but if the complaint was withdrawn, wouldn't the "complainant" have to do the withdrawing?
If there was insufficient evidence, it would be dismissed by the court, but this isn't a court, hence it's not a "criminal" violation. Protocol is extremely different with the FEDS and due process. There are those being held now in the US with no due process, NO right to a speedy trial, and ahven't even been charged yet...yep,,by the feds...and theyare still in detention...check Guanto Bay..... Bob is nowhere near "leftist thinking"; he's a right-wing Limbaugh what part of the 2nd Ammendment he cannot understand? "...the Right of Apples and pineapples. 10 alternators are to run a lot of power.

Putting antennas at a wavelength above ground is just to make them work properly. No logical connection at all. Please try again, west, but with the gas prices..I dunno..but I'll do the same as I do every year and camp in some state forest in the boonies. Just missed Scott last year by a few days.....and George, we could toss a line in one of those northern waters and catch someof them smallmouth that is a Well, Twist, I said it was going up here every day. I just saw it on the news - Rochester, NY, has the 9th highest prices amongst metropolitan areas in the US. The average price here is now $2.059 per gallon. This is of 6:05 PM and is subject to change by the minute.

You're scaring me...I expected 2 bucks a pop but not 'till summer. I'm thinking of going out now and filling everything up tonight...I shoulda been asleep by now..need to get up in a few hours and snag some baitfish for the morning. Tell ya' one thing I did notice..the tourists that were supposed to come this winter...came,,,but in less numbers...bookings are down and overhead is going up. These gas prices may actually make local commercial fishing (for restaurants) a profitable thing again, and that's not good considering the paltry existence the shrimpers are getting by on since the net bans.

You feel the FCC is lax when they claim one is in violation? When the FCC officially says a hammie did something wrong, they usually have an overwhelming or abundance of evidence. Believe it, if he were innocent, he would have a case of slander AND libel for making him out to be a "violator" of FCC rules when he was not, as it would be a detriment to his sterling reputation as a hammie in the publics eye.

I/4 wave away from an open circuit, the impedance is near zero.
The placement angle affects the antenna impedance and vertical radiation angle.

If it was me, I might be tempted to run a colinear up that tree, and use more than the last bit of it's height.

Pick up a antenna book from Bill Orr and see what he says about ground radials on raised vertical antennas after the antenna reachs a certain wavelength above ground.

Well the overhead is not a problem, but the cost of the materials is, and your right in small quantities you will pay more more for them. But even in large quantities such as a Mill Purchase of all 10 different Aluminum Tubing, Square, U-Channel, and Bar Stock in 1000 pound and more purchases, and all the other Aircraft and Marine grade parts, the material cost is significant.

The Interceptor 10K is a Commercial Grade Antenna. It is built with Aircraft Grade Aluminum Tubing, and is internally reinforced with the same high quality Aluminum Tubing. All the clamps and Hardware are Stainless Steel. The Hose Clamps are a Marine Grade, made by Breeze, possibly available in Marine Supply stores, but they are not your common hardware store hose clamp. The connection clamps are even a higher grade of Aircraft Grade Stainless Steel, they don't give em away either.

I believe that Mosley sells the Super Devent for around 300 dollars and Jo-Gunn sell there Son of a Gunn for 344.00 dollars. If you where to compare the amount and quality of the materials in the Interceptor 10K, and compare that to other Commercial or Amateur Antennas you would see that the Interceptor 10K price is well below these. Even the all band amateur verticals, that start at around 349.00 dollars.

The Interceptor 10K Customers are quit pleased in the material quality, and performance. Theres are skads of I-10K customers in your neck of the woods, in Michigan, who use 12 meters. I think theres a big group of guys up there.

Who said $250.00? Is that what your antenna now costs? You antennas were over $300 last time I looked. You can get a PDLII that will knock you antennas dick in the dirt. for 1/2 of your antenna, better yet I can make my own 4 element true quad for about $100.00. Jay, you took an already good antenna And you basically beefed it up for the high winds etc in your area but you didnt re invent the wheel and your hairpin/trombone matching network has been around before you were even concieved. I am not knocking your antenna I really don't think you did anything special except make a heavier duty version of a Penetrator 500 with the ability to handle more watts as a result.

No ofense taken, Cheesecutter
I was born with this name. Not much I can do if some one mired it. You know how it goes.. one hammie ruins it for the rest, one cber ruins it fo rthe rest, one Aaron ruins it for the rest of us. I started lurking about the time Aaron V was stirring things up. If you may recall, he even got on me because of a posting I did about 26 Mhz pirates. I toss my last name and call in there to reduce the risk of mistaken identity. I know this may come out wrong and rub someone the wrong way (which I don't mean to do,trust me) but I am who I am, and I don't need a nick/alter ego to go by.

Jay, is 6063-T8 aircraft grade aluminum, also do you use extruded or drawn tubing?

Seeing the profit involved and low cost to produce I may start making antennas as well. Ill bet there is over 150% markup.

Why do you keep claiming Your antenna uses aircraft grade aluminum tubing ? Cause it sounds hi tech? Sounds like fales advertising.

6063 is commonly referred to as the architectural alloy. It was developed as an extrusion alloy with relatively high tensile properties, excellent finishing characteristics and a high resistance to corrosion. This alloy is most often found in various interior and exterior architectural applications such as windows, doors, store fronts and assorted trim items. It is the alloy best suited for the anodizing process, either plain or in a variety of colors. It may contain more scrap than 6061.

Strength wise:
6061-T6 breaks at 39,000 lbs. while 6063-T6 lets go at only 31,000 lbs

Damn Jay those Breeze clamps you use are also much less than 1.00 a piece, here you can get an assortment with some much bigger sizes that you use along with a display stand.

Breeze Hose Clamp Display

Manufacturer: Breeze Clamps
Leaves warehouse within: 2 days (plus shipping time)

I never thought the day would come when you could finally speak the truth about anything, but you are 117% right on this one. The feds can lock up anyone for as long as they want -- even a US citizen -- without any rights guaranteed by the Constitution, simply by declaring someone an 'enemy combatant'. No attorney, no bail, no trial, no appeal, no checks & balances. That's too much power.

And yes, the FCC needs some Constitutional challenges, too.

Amateur Radio Newsline™ Report 1331 - February 14, 2003

Amateur Radio Newsline report number 1331 with a release date of Friday, February 14 2003 to follow in 5-4-3-2-1.

The following is a Q-S-T.

The terrorism warning level goes up in the United States and ham radio operators should be prepared. The details on Amateur Radio Newsline report number 1331 coming your way right now.

THE WAR ON TERROR: NATION GOES COLOR ORANGE: HAMS SHOULD BE ALERT

Homeland Security Secretary Tom Ridge says every American must be vigilant. This as the Bush administration raises the nations terror alert from Code Yellow to Code Orange and says this represents the most significant warning since the Sept. 11, 2001 attacks. Among those best equipped to assist the nation in fighting terror are its ham radio operators. Amateur Radio Newsline's David Black, KB4KCH takes a look at how hams can prepare themselves and how they can help:

The government isn't minimizing the threat. Officials expects more attacks against the United States and its allies in coming days. The only thing they can't do is predict when and where an attack will occur.

Federal officials recommended that Americans should take basic disaster preparation steps. This includes maintaining a three day stockpile of food and water. They also recommended obtaining duct tape and plastic sheeting to seal a house in the event of a chemical or biological attack or disaster. They also say to have some sort of emergency radio receiver. One that can operate for days without being plugged into a power outlet is best. This will be the primary way the government talks to you should the unthinkable happen.

How can ham radio operators help? Start by making sure that your ham gear works. Especially your hand held and mobile radios. If you only have one battery pack for your H-T, go out and buy one or two more. Or even better, get a case that lets you use alkaline batteries that are widely available. If the power goes out, you can't recharge Ni-Cads or NiM-H cells. But you can operate for a number of hours with Alkaline batteries. So have several sets of these on hand -- at least enough to get you through 72 hours of non-stop operation.

If you are a trained communicator active with an ARES or other emergency communications group, be sure to let the chain of command know where you will be. Give them a list of phone numbers where you can be reached 24 hours a day -- 7 days a week. Better yet, get a pager and give its number only to the person who will be calling you. That way if that pager goes off, you know it's for real.

What about looking out for terrorism in your own community? Do it. Observe and report.

If you see something that looks out of the ordinary or suspicious, call the police. Remember that old adage about better to be safe than sorry. While it's not likely you'll encounter a real live terrorist cell, it's not out of the question, either. And that's where your radio, your local repeater and its autopatch come in.

Even if you don't own a cellular telephone, your hand held or mobile radio is your emergency lifeline. If you have access to an autopatch equipped repeater its a lot better than a cell phone. Cellular phones are known for not being reliable in many areas. With a ham repeater, if you can hear it, the chances are it will hear you. And even if there's no autopatch, another amateur can relay your message to authorities.

What about on the air? What are the chances that a terrorist cell might take to the airwaves on your favorite band? Not very likely but again not impossible, either. Terrorists tend to try to blend in with the background. Setting up a communications network on even an underutilized band like 6 meters would be like waiving a red flag in front of a bull. Hams are very protective of their spectrum and are not afraid to go after those on a band illegally.

It's far more likely that a terror group would set up shop on license free public frequencies than on 2 meter F-M or 20 meter sideband. And it's a pretty good guess that government monitors are keeping a close ear on F-R-S, MURS, Class D CB and the frequencies nearby to each service.

What if you hear something that seems suspicious? There are three letters to remember: F-B-I. The agency set up a website and dial-in tip line immediately following the September 11th attacks. Both are still in service.

The website U-R-L is www1.ifccfbi.gov and it puts you only a link away from filing a report. Just click on the words "Report Terrorist Activity."

And this word to hams who have never handled emergency communications. If you hear a net going on, don't break in to ask if you can help. The chances are that you cannot. You can do more good by listening and learning procedures. Better yet, go to the ARRL's website and sign up for one of their Emergency Communications Training Classes. With the stark new reality of terrorism on our homeland soil, it should be incumbent on every ham regardless of age or license class to become skilled in emergency communications techniques. It might be you who's called on to save a life.

For the Amateur Radio Newsline, I'm David Black, KB4KCH, in Birmingham, Alabama.

The bottom line. As the Office of Homeland Security has said, every American must be vigilant. In retrospect, all of our lives could depend on it. Hams can sign up for emergency communications training at the ARRL website -- www.arrl.org. (ARNewsline™)

ENFORCEMENT: HAM FINED $12000 FOR MULTIPLE VIOLATIONS

A ham has been fined $12,000 for violation of the Amateur Service Rules. We have this report:.

Its one of the largest fines ever assessed for ham radio rules violations and its been handed to Scott E. Kamm, the license holder of amateur radio station N0UGN. And it comes after the Federal Communications Commission finds Kamm apparently responsible for causing intentional interference, broadcasting music and failing to identify with his station by its FCC assigned call.

Kamm's story goes back to December 9, 2002. In response to complaints of continuing interference on 146 point 31 MHz, an agent of the Commission's Kansas City Field Office began monitoring. At approximately 7:00 P.M., the agent observed a very strong signal on the frequency. It was reportedly made up of music, sound effects and unmodulated carriers. No station identification was transmitted. More important. These transmissions were interfering with existing communications that were in progress between other amateur stations.

Using radio direction finding the agent determined the source of these interfering signal to be Kamm's residence in near-by Waterbury, Nebraska. The FCC says that Kamm has two addresses that they know of. One in Sioux City, Iowa and the other in Waterbury where they traced the interference as coming from.

The scenario repeated itself a day later on December 10th. This time the agent entered the premises and inspected Kamm's station. The agent found an amateur radio transmitter capable of operating on 146.31 MHz but Kamm stated that no transmissions were made from his station. That he used the radio to receive only. Kamm also asserted that no one else operated the station.

But the FCC is not buying that story. It says that the Amateur Service Rules state that no ham shall willfully or maliciously interfere with -- or cause interference to -- any other radio communication or signal.

Also amateur stations are prohibited from transmitting music using and that they must identify at the end of each communication or at least every 10 minutes.

And, based on the evidence before it, the FCC says that it finds that Scott E. Kamm did willfully and repeatedly violate the Amateur Service Rules by causing intentional interference, broadcasting music and failing to identify. He is being fined $7000 for the interference, $4000 for transmitting the music and $1000 for failing to identify.

Kamm was given the customary thirty days to pay up or file an appeal. (FCC)

ENFORCEMENT: UNLICENSED RADIO BROADCASTER SENTENCED TO 18 MONTHS PROBATION

The FCC has announced that Benjamin Leroy Carter has been sentenced to 18 months probation. This, following his conviction on seven counts of unlicensed radio operation.

The conviction and subsequent sentencing is the result of an investigation that began in February of 1999. The Commission's Tampa Florida Office says that it received complaints from residents and broadcasters in the Orlando, Florida area of interference to the reception of licensed radio broadcast stations. Carter, who also went by the name of Malik Copafeel Abdul, pled guilty to seven counts of unlicensed radio operation in November of 2002. He also agreed to forfeit all equipment used in connection with the station.

The FCC says that 4 months of the sentence will be served as home confinement. In addition, Carter will be required to perform 50 hours of community service. Its all in cyberspace at http://hraunfoss.fcc.gov/edocs_public/attachmatch/DOC-231068A1.doc (FCC, CGC Communicator)

RESCUE RADIO: NEW CLASS OF FIELD DAY STATION

Amateur Radio's premiere emergency preparedness operating event is changing. This with word that the annual ARRL Field Day will gain another entry class for 2003.

Called Class F, these will be Amateur Radio stations which are set up and operate from emergency operations centers, or EOC's. ARRL says that the change renews the emphasis of Field Day's 1933 origins as an emergency preparedness exercise as opposed to a routine contest. (ARRL)

RESCUE RADIO: A NEW CB SIDEBAND EMERGENCY CHANNEL

Doug Schwinn N0LAY, reports over the QRZ.com website that the Michiana Emergency Monitoring Group is promoting an iniative to have C-B channel 39 designated as an additional frequency to be used and monitored during emergencies. This in addition to the existing C-B channel 9.

The reason? Schwinn, who also holds the call KDZ0430 says that he joined in the effort because of the mountainous region of Colorado where he lives. He says that he would likely be heard using lower sideband on C-B Channel 39 than A-M on Channel 9 during an emergency situation. He also notes that a spokesperson for the group stated in an article in Popular Communications that this is part of an effort to restore and legitimize the Citizen Band Service. (N0LAY via Internet)

RESCUE RADIO: HAM RADIO ASSISTANCE IN COLUMBIA DEBRIS RECOVERY ENDS

Ham radio communications assistance in finding parts from the fallen space shuttle Columbia has wound down. According to several Internet reports, February 12th was the last day hams were to be called out to provide communications in the recovery effort.

During the height of the recovery, activities being conducted over the W5NAC repeater in Nacogdoches Texas could be monitored using Echolink's EDU_NET conference. Rick Hambly, W2GPS, says that there was a very active effort by RACES and SKYWARN to aid NASA and government agencies like the FBI with the identification, G-P-S location, cataloging and recovery of space shuttle Columbia components.

As previously reported, the Columbia was at 203,000 feet when it disintegrated plummeted back to Earth. All seven Astronauts on board were killed. Three of the 7 were licensed radio amateurs but no ham radio gear was carried on that ill-fated flight. (VHF Reflector, W2GPS, others)

REMEMBERING COLUMBIA: HAM CREATES ON-LINE MEMORIAL

A former Amateur Radio Newsline Young Ham of the Year ward recipient has created a lasting Internet tribute to the space shuttle Columbia.

The memorial website was created by Kevin Boudreaux, N5XMH, of Orlando Florida. Boudreaux, who grew up just outside New Orleans was the recipient of our 1993 "Young Ham of the Year Award" for his organizing Amateur Radio emergency communications following a devastating hurricane.

Today Boudreaux is a Manager with the Hilton Hotels and a professional website designer. He tells Amateur Radio Newsline that he was so personally touched by the Columbia tragedy that he created this memorial website to the shuttle and its crew.

The webpages he has created are filled with facts about the orbiter and its mission along with photos and short biographies of its STS-107 crew. Kevin also provides links to other Columbia memorial websites along with the complete statement of President George W. Bush when he sadly went on the air to let the world know that the Columbia was lost.

Kevin was only 14 when he went out to help his community in time of disaster. He was 15 when he received the "Young Ham of the Year Award" and his dedication has never stopped.

RESCUE RADIO: HAM RADIO IN TV DOCUMENTARY

Ham radio is part of a soon to be shown documentary produced for the Discovery Channel. Joe Moell, K0OV, has the details:

Members of the Hospital Disaster Support Communications System of Orange County, California have been included in tapeings for a new documentary series on the Discovery Channel. "Critical Rescue," a series of programs featuring rescue workers and those who support them, made its debut on February 6.

A team from New Dominion Pictures spent a half-day with HDSCS last August. They interviewed founder and leader April Moell, WA6OPS, and taped reenactments of ham communications that took place on April 23, 2002. On that day, hams were awaiting their assignments for one of the four large-scale disaster drills in Orange County each year. At 8:10 AM, a 6000-ton mile-long freight train struck a standing Metrolink double-decker commuter train at a crossing in Placentia, causing three deaths and over 200 injuries. The drill was immediately cancelled, and as rescuers converged on the train crash scene, area hospitals braced for the wounded passengers.

As Net Control, WA6OPS quickly deployed hams to the 14 hospitals most likely to receive victims. There they handled countless messages, verifying victim dispatch and patient counts, providing information for inquiring victim families, and communicating with hams supporting the Red Cross. Within some hospitals, HDSCS provided direct links to handle messages between triage areas, Emergency Departments, and Command Posts.

Additional HDSCS operators participating in the reenactments were Sam Creason K6EW, Cheryl Simpson KD6MWZ, Ralph Swanson WB6JBI, and David Mofford W7KTS. It is not known how much of the HDSCS footage will appear in the edited program.

From southern California, this is Joe Moell K-zero-Oscar-Victor for Amateur Radio Newsline.

Again, "Fateful Journey" will air 8 and 11 PM Eastern and Pacific times on Thursday February 20th, and again at 2 PM Eastern and Pacific on Saturday February 22nd. (ARNewsline™, K0OV)

ARRL PACIFIC DIVISION DIRECTOR JIM MAXWELL, W6CF, SK

ARRL Pacific Division Director Jim Maxwell, W6CF, has died. The 69 year old Maxewll passed away on Thursday February 6th at his home in Redwood Estates, California. The cause of his death has not been announced.

Maxwell, who became a Director in January 2000, joined the ARRL Board in 1994 after being elected Pacific Division Vice Director. He also served as an ARRL Emergency Coordinator from October 1991 to March 1999.

An avid DXer, Jim Maxwell belonged to mumerous DX clubs, contest clubs and organizations. This included the famed Northern California Contest Club. He also served as a member of the ARRL DX Advisory Committee from April 1988 through 1994 and was an accredited Volunteer Examiner.

Professionally, Maxwell held doctoral degrees in aeronautical engineering and biomechanics. He retired from the Lockheed Missiles and Space Corporation as a technical consultant in 1992 and from Scitor Corporation in 1998.

Pacific Division Vice Director Bob Vallio, W6RGG, takes over immediately as Director. ARRL President Jim Haynie, W5JBP, will appoint a new Vice Director in the coming days. Maxwell previously held the call W6CUF. (ARRL)

HAM RADIO IN SPACE: ISS PACKET RETURN DELAYED FURTHER

When will the packet system on the International space station come back on? Nobody is quite sure but ARISS International Chairman Frank Bauer, KA3HDO says that his group has been working with its colleagues in NASA and Russia's Energia to get it operational again. Unfortunately, so far they have only been successful in getting it turned on for about one orbit.

Bauer says that several factors are impeding the packet startup. First, the progress vehicle docked with ISS and the crew is currently unpacking and stowing about a ton of supplies and equipment. Also, the crew is working with their mission control counterparts on schedule changes that have occurred due to the Columbia accident.

Given these items its apparent that this crew is not as engaged in ham radio the way the last ISS Expedition crew was. And because of this the packet system may be off for a bit longer. (ANS)

CONTESTING: ARRL SAYS BEACONET IS OK

ARRL Contest Branch Manager Dan Henderson, N1ND, says that BEACONet does not violate any contesting rules. According to Henderson, after additional review the ARRL has come to believe that BEACONet is similar to an automated CQ'ing system. That it only facilitates the solicitation of contacts and as such it seems to comply with the letter and spirit of the contest rules. (VHF Reflector)

DX

In DX we take to the sky this week. This with word that Wayne Estes, W9AE, plans to operate the Amsat Oscar 40 satellite as FG slash W9AE from the island of Guadeloupe. The tentative plan is for Wayne to start operation at 2300 U-T-C on February 21, 22, 25, and 26 for windows to the Americas and the Pacific. Also listen for him on Sunday February 23 from 1500 to 2000 UTC for a satellite window to Europe and central Asia. Exact operating times will depend on the RUDAK schedule and Wayne's vacation activities. If you work him, QSL to Wayne Estes, 18673 W. Meadow Lane, Mundelein IL 60060, U.S.A. (ANS)

And Hagal International reports that Israeli amateur operator Dov Gavish, 4Z4DX is the first ham in the world to completely confirm DXCC using electronic QSL's. Although still not recognised by the DXCC, electronic QSL'ing is gaining ground in the DX community. (Hagal International)

Also, the ARRL's new Logbook of the World secure electronic contact-confirmation system took a major leap toward public release in January. This, with several weeks of limited tesrting of the concept. (ARRL)

THAT FINAL ITEM: TURN AROUND IS FAIR PLAY

And finally this week, we have all heard the expression "turn around is fair play. And one person who has just found that out is former computer hacker turned on-line security expert Kevin Mitnick, N6NHG. That's because Mitnick's new company website has been -- well -- hacked. Amateur Radio Newsline's Bruce Tennant, K6PZW, has the rest of the story:

The ham who holds the honor of being the world's best-known computer hacker suffered the indignity of having hackers break into his new security consulting company's Web site -- twice. But news reports say that Kevin Mitnick, N6NHG, simply shrugged off the incidents as amusing and not serious enough for him to call authorities to investigate.

As I said, two electronic break-in's have taken place. The first was on January 30th. In that one a hacker calling himself "BugBear" added a page to Mitnick's corporate website that read "Welcome back to freedom, Mr. Kevin." This is probably a reference to Mitnick's probation which ended ten days earlier on January 20th. During his probation Mitnick was barred from accessing the Internet and this hack may have been more of a welcome home -- in this case -- home being the World Wide Web.

The latest incident took place over the weekend of February 8th and 9th and was more of an on-line job application than a hack. In this case a hacker in Texas broke in and asked Mitnick to hire him as the company's security officer.

Mitnick says that the hackers apparently exploited separate flaws in Microsoft's Internet server software. He says that the person responsible for the company's Web site failed to install patches available from Microsoft.

In neither instance did hackers vandalize the Website. One said in e-mail that he didn't do damage out of respect for Mitnick.

For the Amateur Radio Newsline, I'm Bruce Tennant, K6PZW, in Los Angeles.

Mitnick's new organization is called Defensive Thinking and is located in Los Angeles. A company spokesman said that no customer information was released nor was there any danger of information being compromised. (Published news stories)

This is also confirmed by Dave Hall in a previous post.

The term "bleed" seems to be applied to a broad set of spurious emissions that are not all related.

If you tell me that an Antron 99 is more prone to RFI problems with neighbor's entertainment equipment, I would agree with you. The design of the antenna, does not allow proper RF decoupling, and allows the feedline to radiate, which places RF in proximity to powerlines and neighboring homes, and exacerbates RFI.

If you tell me that one antenna, radiates the second harmonic at a higher level than another type antenna, I would also agree. But it's still the radio that is generating the second harmonic.

An antenna cannot make a radio splatter more. It can't make a radio's audio any louder or softer (contrary to what I've heard some supposedly "knowlegable" techs tell people over the air). It only takes what is fed to it, and radiates it. Some antennas do a better job radiating, and will show a better signal.

It is possible that some antennas exhibit such a broad bandwidth, that a broad "dirty" signal could be better radiated by one antenna over another. I have seen cases where users sound hashy and seem to splatter more on a receiver with a certain type of noise blanker. In this case, the antenna is once again only radiating the dirty signal.

Poor connections/corrosion on an antenna that, when hit by transmit power, act as a rectifier, and generate broadband noise. This is usually only a problem for the attached receiver that's trying to use the same antenna as the transmitter.

3451. Is it about the Oil?

If so So what

The left says it's all about oil, don't they? All of the girl lovers. Even though I don't believe it's about oil but lets just say it is about oil! All of the boys lovers. All of the Anti American haters. All of the white male haters that were in the crowd over the weekend. They all said it's about oil! Well, I say so what if it's all about oil! First of all how did they all get to Washington? What did they put, vegetables in the gas tank? No, I think they got there by using big oil.
Don't you know that natural resources have been the primary reason for wars of the pass? Weather it was salt amongst the American Indians. The hill tribes fighting the coastal duelers. The coastal duelers being greedy not wanting to give up the salt. And the folks up in the mountains, needing salt, there'd come down and kill a few coastal Indians for salt. That was a natural resource war, boys and girls! How about wars that were fought over other natural resources? Such as. Gold, silver, coal, land, lumber, water. You name it! From the beginning of time, wars have been fought over natural resources. So what if it's all about oil. Why are you acting so sacred you liberal scum bags? You don't need oil? Your very freedoms depend upon oil!
By the way, after our government seizes the oil fields from this psychopathic crazy sand monkey who killed thirty-thousand of his own people and threatens the entire world should he gain power. What do you think is going to happen? Well, there's two answers to that. After we seize the oil and divide it up amongst the big sisters in the oil business. If the price goes down, I will say it was a justified war. If on the other hand the oil sisters rise the price of oil, then I would say that their no better than Saddam. Their no better than the Saudi princess. And then we'll really have trouble on our hands. But certainly you can't go the other way and say that if we release the embargo on Saddam and permitted him to pump oil, why then all would be good in the world. Don't you stupid asses understand what he would do with the oil revenue? You stupid shit birds! He would use that oil revenue to build up a bigger military and a faster military and a more threatening military and he would threaten you with nuclear weapons that could reach you. But if it's all about oil then so what. What is wrong with it all being about oil? Can anyone reading this tell me why it is immoral to take the oil from Saddam? Tell me why it's immoral! I want you to tell me! Your telling me because that evil dictator was burn over that sand where a bunch of dinosaurs died that he is supposed to keep that oil? I don't believe it for a minute. Has he distributed that oil at a lower price to those poor countries? The answer is simply no! NO NO NO!
All you liberals out there in the streets screaming it's all about oil as though you are disconnected from the benefits of this oil! As though your airplane that you flew to Washington flew on banana peels. You didn't go on a magic carpet or did you? How did you get there? You got there by oil you stupid ass! If the oil prices went up, you wouldn't be able to afford a ticket right? How did you get around Washington? Everything you did was fueled by oil! Cars and S.U.V'S! Yes that's right, S.U.V'S. I'm not even going to go there since the left wingers are attacking people who drive S.U.V'S. Saying if you drive an S.U.V then your sponsoring terrorism. Have you notice that Liberals seem to attack anything that's happy? Well, let me get back to my points here. Did you know that Saudi Arabia was sitting on the oil back in the 1950s and they didn't know what to do with it. It was the genius of the American mind that exploited that oil as it were for the Saudi people and made them the richest people on the earth at that time. Certainly the oil companies have benefited but you can say we've all benefited from cheap petroleum. Our entire civilization has been built upon it. The worst thing that can happen to us would be to see oil go to 200 dollars a barrel and us paying 10 dollars a gallon for gasoline, it would destroy our economy. What would happen if our economy was destroyed? It would be the end of America. Now isn't that what the left wants? That's why they are all screaming it's all about oil! So what if it's about oil. It gives us an additional reason to back the president. In addition to the fact that the evil dictator over there acts and looks like Hitler, by the way did already gassed 30 thousand of his own citizens. Where the hell were the protesters? I didn't see them march down Washington then. Why? Because it's not about war that gets them into the streets! It's about hating President Bush! It's about hating Republicans. And If you don't think that this so called Anti war movement is not being funded by the Democrat National Committee in secret channels your crazy! If you don't think it's not receiving money from Iraq, your crazy! That's how this things work.

You see the Antiwar protesters/Liberals/Anti Americans, will never rise in any society. They're going to be losers on soap boxes in Washington D. C in January of 03. And they would be losers if God forbid we ever lost a war against Islamo fascism. And those who hate us, defeated us. They would also be losers on soap boxes or they would be exterminated all together. These so called Anti war protesters say they are protesting against the war and that America just wants oil. Well, let me tell you something. It has nothing to do with anti war or oil. These people are all about stopping the machinery of America, breaking the economy, collapsing the civilization, bringing it all down on man, rolling us over to the new world order run by the perverts in Belgium.
This war is going to happen no matter what! Its going to be over quickly and we're all be thankful that it's over because we're all going to benefit from it!

The only way to achieve peace on earth is by getting rid of those evil dictators who pose a great threat and danger to peace on earth.

I say we need to liberate the oil for the worlds poor!

RESCUE RADIO: A NEW CB SIDEBAND EMERGENCY CHANNEL

Doug Schwinn N0LAY, reports over the QRZ.com website that the Michiana Emergency Monitoring Group is promoting an iniative to have C-B channel 39 designated as an additional frequency to be used and monitored during emergencies. This in addition to the existing C-B channel 9.

The reason? Schwinn, who also holds the call KDZ0430 says that he joined in the effort because of the mountainous region of Colorado where he lives. He says that he would likely be heard using lower sideband on C-B Channel 39 than A-M on Channel 9 during an emergency situation. He also notes that a spokesperson for the group stated in an article in Popular Communications that this is part of an effort to restore and legitimize the Citizen Band Service. (N0LAY via Internet)

I hate to be repetitive, but you can't say a thing about me since you don't know anything about me and since you don't know anything about me you can't even claim that I'm "licenseless". What can you base that claim on?

In fact, you didn't say anything about me, although you described yourself precisely, Doggie.

The Brits may loose their Highband 27.6 to 28MHz because the NATO-shortwaveradar neads clear frequencies and there ist worldwide no other legal usage of CB over 27,6MHz they can use the worldstandart-CB 26,965 to 27,405 40 CEPT/FCC in EU-Standart AM/FM/SSB in future.

But the problem ist we dont have MURS or GMRS in Europe and the Brits get that Highband as "replacement" for their 934MHz Band they lost.

Jay you make some very fabulous claims, Can you tell me since you claim a low loss impedance matching network, can you explain what types are High loss? And can you explain what makes your impedance matching low loss, db's better in fact after all a 5/8 wave antenna no matter who built it can only theoretically have XX amount of db gain. If the max gain theoretical of a 5/8 is 5db then by your claims the other 5/8 waves are only putting out 3 db of gain. 3db is 2x the power you are saying your antenna is almost twice as strong as the other 5/8 wave antennas on the market and that I have a hard time swallowing.

Let me also ask you this, your impedance matching is no different than what was used on the penetrator, yours will handle more watts but the end result is the same, the addition of inductance.The antenna is set to resonance with the length and fine tuned with the matching network, So again how may I ask that you achieve 2db gain more from a matching network which sole purpose is to transform one impedance to another and they must both work since a low swr can be achieved with all the other 5/8 waves.... Please take the time to answer, since you took the time to make the claims. Thanks

After your march, when you return to your cozy little house basking in a warm self-congratulatory glow at the thought of a job well done, perhaps you'd spare a minute or two to pen a letter to Dr Khalaf [see below] and explain to him why his fellow Iraqis should be left at the mercy of Saddam. I'm sure he'd appreciate it, he might even forward them to his relatives who are still in Iraq - I'm sure they'd be interested in your expert views.

http://www.guardian.co.uk/letters/story/0,3604,895397,00.html

Dr B Khalaf

Friday February 14, 2003

The Guardian

I write this to protest against all those people who oppose the war against Saddam Hussein, or as they call it, the "war against Iraq". I am an Iraqi doctor, I worked in the Iraqi army for six years during Iraq-Iran war and four months during Gulf war. All my family still live in Iraq. I am an Arab Sunni, not Kurdish or Shia. I am an ordinary Iraqi not involved with the Iraqi opposition outside Iraq. I am so frustrated by the appalling views of most of the British people, media and politicians. I want to say to all these people who are against the possible war, that if you think by doing so you are serving the interests of Iraqi people or saving them, you are not. You are effectively saving Saddam. You are depriving the Iraqi people of probably their last real chance get rid of him and to get out of this dark era in their history.
My family and almost all Iraqi families will feel hurt and anger when Saddam's media shows on the TV, with great happiness, parts of Saturday's demonstration in London. But where were you when thousands of Iraqi people were killed by Saddam's forces at the end of the Gulf war to crush the uprising? Only now when the war is to reach Saddam has everybody become so concerned about the human life in Iraq. Where were you while Saddam has been killing thousands of Iraqis since the early 70s? And where are you are now, given that every week he executes people through the "court of revolution", a summary secret court run by the secret security office. Most of its sentences are executions which Saddam himself signs.
I could argue one by one against your reasons for opposing this war. But just ask yourselves why, out of about 500,000 Iraqis in Britain, you will not find even 1,000 of them participating tomorrow? Your anti-war campaign has become mass hysteria and you are no longer able to see things properly.

I think you are pretty sick to use the horrific tragety of 9/11 to start an unrelated war. You dishonor the 3000 lives lost to scare the American public to kill 100,000+ people who were not involved in 9/11.

"Adele Welty, whose son, a firefighter, was killed in the attacks of September 11, 2001, said she believed Saddam Hussein was a ruthless dictator but that the United States should work with the United Nations to find a peaceful solution.
"Timothy was at the World Trade Center on September 11 to save lives," she

The author if the letter isnlt looking at the wider picture.

Why replace one unilateral, unaccountable military ruler with another?

The people opposing war in Iraq want peace, democracy and justice.

We will not get any of these from a United States that is allowed to do whatever it likes, attack whomeever it pleases.....and through all of that refuse to be held to account by the world for anything.

Bush wants to be policeman, prosecutor, judge and jury ......and executioner. If you disagree with this effective tyranny, he calls you names - "irrelavent", "old nantions", "jealous" and "ridiculous".

He is not a leader. He is a wrecker. What shame he has two more years to continue to wreck the global economy, his own democracy (more on that later), the UN and America's long time alliances.

Remeber George W Bush wasn't even elected. He was appointed by the US Supreme Court. It is now clear that had all the votes been counted, Al Gore would have won.

That democracy failed so spectacularly is a sign that serous problems are still to come. You can bet G W Bush will be looking for a rpeat - and his brother, Jeb, in Florida, is already working on how to corupt the outcome there in 2004. (www.gregpalast.com).

None of that has been fixed.

I iknow that American's are raised from birth to see the US President almost asa demi-god - much like the ancient Roman view of their emperors. But since Eisenhower and - perhaps Kennedy - they have all been unworthy of this level od respect. With the sole exceptions of Jimmy Carter and Gerald Ford, they have all been liars and cheats.

Peter you are the sick one, you want to allow this terrorism to go on.
Well it is a new day, and terrorists and the countries that support them will no longer be tolerated. Nor we will standby and let these terrorists and the countries that support them continue to exist as they have in the

Well, Mr. "..",
The stink of human flesh burning in the fallen towers for several days after 9/11 has been imprinted in my brain - I don't need your reminders. I join the question the other responders have already asked you: What is the Iraqi connection to 9/11? How many Iraqi nationals did you count on the planes crushed into the towers?

Imagine: you are walking down a street and all of a sudden you get bitten by a stray dog. Before you realize what has happened the dog runs away. But you are very angry; you pick up a stick and start beating up all those angry dogs which dare to bark at you and which are conveniently tied to their dog-houses. How long do you think you will continue doing this before a mob of angry dog-owners starts beating you up? This is exactly what Bush is trying to do. The stray dog OBL has run away. So, Bush finds another angry dog which is tied to a piece of land called Iraq. The excuse is that this dog has already barked at your dad and even tried to bite some of the neighbors who attempted to steal oil from that land. While he is at it, he is ready not only to beat the dog, but also to grab the house which that angry dog has been guarding. What Bush is seeing today is the whole neighborhood of that house about to be robbed is coming out in protest.

I hope you understand metaphorical language.

There are some people that think the impending war is just a response to 9/11 and the anthrax letters. Not true. We know that the threat of attacks is real, that such attacks are probably inevitable, and that we can't afford to be blackmailed by every whacko terrorist organization or country that makes such threats. The list of terror attacks against the US is long:

http://www.cdi.org/terrorism/chronology.cfm

If nothing is done, the list will get longer and the entries more terrible. But "We The People" don't have the hard facts needed to be absolutely certain that war is necessary. If the US government has such facts (and I would hope they have enough to justify war), perhaps this evidence is being withheld because its disclosure might reveal the extent of our spy technology, and therefore compromise future intelligence gathering abilities. If that is the case then the facts will be revealed in the future for historians to judge. However, it would be nice if we had an explanation instead of being forced to rely upon blind faith in the government. On that note...

We know that the US government doesn't care about "liberating" the people of Iraq, or else they would also be "liberating" the people of Saudi Arabia, Bosnia, Serbia, etc; The US doesn't care about about dictatorships, since they have installed a few of their own (Guatemala, Cuba, Iran, etc); They don't care about regional instability unless it threatens their economic interests, which is why the US did absolutely nothing about the civil wars that raged in Africa and other resource-poor regions for decades. We also know that the US will use lame excuses for waging war for economic purposes, a recent example of which was the war in Panama (which I prefer to call the "Canal War", since it encompassed the support of Nicaraguan Contras to take back what would have been the Nicaraguan Canal. And don't forget that we took back Panama under the excuse of drug trafficking, which is, ironically, what the US was doing itself at the very same time in order to fund the Contras -- all done under the Reagan/Bush administrations). These are not encouraging facts.

But let's take this from another perspective: Why are all these terrorists coming from oil-rich regions? The reality is that the terrorists are nothing but pawns used by radicals that are trying to control some oil for themselves. And who are controlling these pawns? Well, any organization or government that deliberately attemts to stir up trouble in the region is suspect because they know that political and economic instability opens up great opportunities for seizing valuable resources. Iraq is a prime candidate, since they not only give money to the families of Palistinian suicide bombers, but several years ago they invaded Kuwait for it's oil fields (or did everyone forget that little skirmish?). Iraq has a long history of supporting anti-US terrorism both directly and indirectly. There is little doubt that they have NBC weapons and are willing to use them (as they have done before against their own people) or provide them for anti-US terrorist attacks (the anthrax in the letters came from somewhere, maybe it came from Iraq?). The threat from Iraq is clear and unmistakable, it cannot be ignored, nor can it be allowed to continue. There are other threats, but Iraq is on the top of the list.

I don't think any sane person wants war. Saddam can prevent this war, but instead he seems determined to martyr his entire country. For what reason I can't imagine: insanity, by definition, is without reason. This alone is sufficient cause for his removal.

On a domestic note, one of my primary concerns with this war is that Bush has been granted too much power. These anti-terrorism legislations were passed in a time of fear and turmoil. Now that we have had some time to settle down, the government should be re-evaluating their long-term policies that were made with such urgency.

sparky@NOSPAMdc4pc.net

P.S., Maybe after the war we can ship a pile of CB radios to Iraq to encourage free speech and open communications.

Yes

No never over 300.00, first at 299.00, then down to 279.00, now 250.00.

Now your comparing apples and oranges. The PDL-II should nose ahead in FS Measurements.

I couldn't find the PDL-II any where for sale, but did see the Moonraker
4 Element Beam for 199.00 Dollars, I might just buy one, good deal. I think it was at Palco Electronics?

Good call George, if you can do the more power to ya. For 100.00 + that would be the cost of good coax, and connectors, and a good coax switch.

Good question! Yes the I-10K is internally reinforced, but it is not a copy or close resemblance of the Penetrator 500, its totally different in its design and ability to be adjusted to be tuned.

Every part is pain stakenly deburred, 3M Aluminum wheels on a grinder are used, very expensive counter sink bits are used, and some places the use a fine ribbed files is used. And some high speed rotary files are used. But there are deburring machines out there that make it easier and faster.

Sometimes it seems with different production lots of material, the deburring wheels requirement changes.

What price can you give me for 6063-T8, say in 1000 Lb quantities?

George, both pages are stark reminders of what we and the people of Iraq have endured. Although ridding the mideast of Saddam's control wont make the world all better, he is the one most visible bastion of evil in that region. Even with him under control, we will have much work to do.

As far as the protestors....go protest near the family of one of the victims of 9/11. See what you get.

Other Impedance Matching Devices such as coils and capacitors will have more loss than actual Aluminium Tubing, not hard to see that. The I-10K has a real world Antenna Gain Rating, I didn't rate the other 5/8 antenna gain figures.

A lot of people have a hard time believing that the I-10K has a hotter FS than others. But thats what my tests show, Thats what the Prototype uses saw and again thats what the customers are saying also.

Yes the end result is the same to match the coaxes impedance with the 5/8 impedance, but with lower loss's. The lack of loss's a are in the I-10K Design, and how the design is used with all other features. After that its proprietary.

Welcome to the antenna business. Heah maybe we can meet at one of the Breaks, have a few drinks, meet all the nice people, a little BBQ, home made wine, Oh Yeah!

> Why do you keep claiming Your antenna uses aircraft grade aluminum tubing ?
> Cause it sounds hi tech? Sounds like fales advertising.

Aircraft grade is refereed to as, close tolerance, (in the wall thickness and OD) and heat treated for added strength and being rigid. False Advertising I don't think so. One of the things you will to watch out for is that the tolerances of aluminum tubing wall thickness will vary. Most will spec 5% plus or minus wall thickness tolerance. Since .058 inches of wall thickness is used, .058 + .0029 = .0609, x 2 = .1218 inches.

So as a example, if 1 1/4 inch OD Aluminum Tubing is used, and has a wall thickness of .058 inches that has a 5% thicker wall, then:

1 1/4 - .1218 = 1.1282 inches, of Inside diameter, will just allow (but not always) 1.125 inch OD (which is 1 1/8" OD Tubing) to be "Telescoped" into the 1 1/4 inch tubing. As you can see you will only have .0032/2 = .0016 inches of gap, pretty tight ah! So when ordering Aluminum Tubing, you must specify that the different sizes will "Telescope" into each other, and specify that material that can not be "Telescoped" can be returned for material that is.

Also you will need a skilled machinist, that has a MIll and a Lathe, not cheap!!!, Oh brother not cheap!!!! Have him make you some close tolerance + - .001 inches Rods that are the same sizes (and some larger) of the tubing you will need for your antenna. These will be uses as a go or no-go gage or tool for determining tubing wall thickness, when buying tubing.

Also may I suggest a good Materials Consultant, and a Stress Analyst Consultant. Be very careful here as you want both functions to be integrated with each other in the sense of knowing what will work and what is affordable, not just reciting a book. Good ones will want to see and look at the end product and test it analytically and under a load test (if you have the money for a load test)

This is a typical explanation of the basic material 6063. Other materials that are stronger than the 6063-T8 is 6061-T6 (by almost 1%), and don't forget 7075-T6, 7075-T655 Stainless Steel, and Titanium. Of course these other materials will drive up the price significantly.

> Strength wise:
> 6061-T6 breaks at 39,000 lbs. while 6063-T6 lets go at only 31,000 lbs

I use 6063-T8 and its rated at 42,000 PSI of Tensile Strength, and 39,000 PSI of Yield Strength. I don't know what ratings your talking about? But the difference is insignificant.

Thats close to the price, under a dollar each in production quantities.
But the point of using the good stuff, is that it lasts. If you use these clamps for you antenna, you will be happy I refereed them to you.
You will need to of course order exactly what you need for your production requirements. Tell John not to ship in box containers buy mass boxed is ok. Saves ya the time from getting 10 to a box.

Hello George:

I think Dave Hall has posted some great to excellent stuff here, and as a matter of fact I have saved some of his postings in a reference file, along with others.

My meaning of "Bleed" is not that of spurious emissions, harmonics, or IMD.
But that of a antenna squirting or directing a significant amount of energy below the horizon that would or could cause more neighbor consumer electronics interference.

Antennas do not generate spurious, or harmonics, but do have different patterns.

I wish I had a Dime for every time I have heard a guy who has replaced a none ground plan antenna with a ground plan antenna that has significantly reduced or eliminated interference problems.

No, I don't want terrorism to go on. But, there is no connection between 9/11 and Iraq. Al Queda and Osama were responsible for 9/11. The is zero evidence that Saddam was involved in 9/11 and the link between Saddam and Osama is very weak.

Osama was responsible for 9/11. Osama is free. Osama has publically stated he wants to commit more 9/11 style terrorism. Osama is the threat. Killing 100,000+ Iraqis to extract revenge on Osama is wrong. This war will not remove any threat of terrorism, but will "supercharge Al Queda recruitment".

That's true today; but that was several years ago so it was probably more like two and a half gallons. ;) And, it was Priority Mail, not "kick it around" UPS, so it got here in one piece and in only 2 or 3 days. LOL!

Well Jay what other meaning of bleed is there LOL

Any 5/8 wave will have a lower angle of radiation as compared to their shorter counterpart, your adevrtising trys to make it sound that 'your'antenna is doing something special that others can't.

Yes Jay false advertising. That is not the definition of aircraft grade aluminum, heat treated is designated by the T8 designator.

One of the things you will to watch

Your not using any of them except 6063-T8 which you are claiming is aircraft grade. So your price should be cheaper .
Keep throwing some bS out there Jay instead of focusing on the lies you have made.

Of course I will need to order exactly what I need I will probably get them alittle cheaper too. Ill bet it doesnt cost you $10.00 for clamps on 1 of your antennas.

to happen either way with either antenna.

How so Jay I see you didn't go into the explantion. yes your antenna is much beefier and stronger aluminum is used no doubt.
A matching network either matches an antenna or it doesnt, Is 1 LC network more efficient than another , Jay your wild claims about being 2db more efficient borders or writing new laws of physics. That is almost 2x the Ok Jay the penetrator uses aluminum and no coils and no caps how is your antenna which is the same size and uses a almost identical matching network that much stronger? Do you put a little amp in th bottom of them?

Jay taking a look at your antenna reveals no propriatry design just the same old impedance matching that has been around for years. inductance You Can't "prove a negative". Can you prove the positive. I base my opinion (Yes, opinion) from the what information I can get from the media. Reports quoting intelligence agencies have long dismissed the connection. I also think (try it sometime) about the likelyhood of a connection. Logic dictates that Saddam and Osama are natural enemies. Also, Saddam is a survivor and knows his days would be very short if he involved himself on a direct attack on US soil. Consider this, why did he ask the US for permission to invade Kuwait?

No, they had support from the Taliban. Some information suggests that they recieved help, knowingly or unknowingly, from Saudia Arabia. And intelligence agencies have made no link to 9/11. The Bush administration needs a link between Saddam and Osama. Intelligence agencies have leaked recentment that the Bush administration has been pushing them to make a link. Even Bush has not claimed involvement, though possibly through inuendo.

We and the UN can't find them, how the hell is Osama going to get them. I know you think Saddam would give Osama the weapons, but this would be just as dangerous to Saddam as the US. Further, Al Queda is a shadow army. They work from within. You need large quanties of chemical weapons to preform a 9/11 level attack. Al Queda does not need Saddams WMD. They can manufacture their own crude chemical weapons.

"Off topic" in rec.radio.cb? Isn't that the norm? In the past few days there have been scores of posts on this very topic, yet you pick out mine to whine about protocol. Why is that, Doc? Personal grudge?

Hmm.. 60A at 13.8V is 828W input. Class AB amps are roughly 50% efficient..
That also assumes that you deliver the 60A with NO voltage droop, somewhat unlikely.
The current drain for 700W output under the same conditions would be closer to 110A

It does if you know what he's referring to!

"What happen"
"Some one set up us the bomb"
"what"
"We get signal main screen turn on"
"it's you"

\How are you gentlemen\
\all your base are belong to us\
\you are on the way to destruction\

"what you say"

hey george did you ever hear anything about those fire engines that were crushed under all that debree that fell when the two towers collapsed......well there was some stuff on the net for a short while then it vanished.......i think i copied it, but it was a report by somebody that the fire engines were full of stolen contraband....seems like some of our heros were in those buildings helping themselves to whatever they could carry out......if you will remember some cops were charged with stealing watches , etc. out of some of the stores in the basements of those buildings....of course all of this type of info is politically incorrect.........

Think of the possibilities if we don't: Technology has advanced to the point where any demented techno-nerd can whip up a batch of nerve gas or botulism toxin in his own garage. The huge number of meth labs should give you a clue as to how easy it has become to do things like this. In this rapidly shrinking world you either have to behave yourself or face the consequences. Now imagine a paranoid, religous extremist dictator with huge resources and suicidal zealots at his disposal. But wait... you don't have to imagine it because Saddam already exists...!

The alternative to this war is to just sit back, do nothing, let them develop new and horrific ways to exterminate millions of people, and then see what happens next. That's not my first choice -- is it your's?

But 700W isn't the same as 700W pep. It's very similar to what car stereos were doing a few years ago (and may still be, I stopped caring) where they rate absolute peak power, instead of sustained power. I've seen "300W" amps with a 5A fuse.. "Peak Music Power" was the meaningless rating most stuck on them.

If you tell me it's 700W, I expect to be able to run it CW, into my DL continuously at that level.

This change that you're describing is Pax Americana. It is unrelated to 9/11. It's planning probably began long before 9/11. The connection is that 9/11 is the enabler. Bush and Co. could not do this without public support that flows from 9/11. WMD and resolutions are just legal excuses to end run the UN.

I hope you realize, this Pax Americana will not happen overnight. It may never happen. It might be accomplished with a country or two, but the US cannot force every Arab country into submission. It will raise resentment from other countries inside and outside the Arab world.

The big problem with this goal is that thousands will be killed so Bush and Co. can fulfill it's vision. Even if Bush and Co. are altruistic, the road to hell is paved with good intentions.

Islam must be taught a lesson. They HAVE to control their terrorists.
Iraq will be crushed, and that's not the end. Once Bush is in Iraq, there will be strikes made against other nations that harbor, support, encourage terrorists. You folks will be marching and protesting well into the future. All for naught. Rational minds trump yours.
When you march and protest against good, you will always lose.

Exactly. I seriously think these appeasers have the notion that their protests can prevent the just removal of Hussein. Bush has not forgotten September 11, 2001, he said it's going to be a long war.
He's going to go after other countries right after Iraq, he'll span the globe, pissing off other appeasing nations.
The terrorists want the protesters dead as well as any other non-muslim. By mollifying the terrorists by not attacking Iraq is NOT going to make their hearts kind and soft and make them not want to kill us.

Here's a nifty way of putting it:

"Ah yes, we must mollify angry fanatics who seek our destruction because otherwise .. they might get mad and seek our destruction."

The K-40 has a real neat twist off set-up! It does get looser over the years as I've found out the hard way.

You can put a 9' whip on anything...but it certainly is not practical!

I had one on the roof of a 1975 El Camino! The wind noise was horrible. The K-40 that replaced it was a god send...and worked real well!

Later, I had a K-40 on another vehicle. After loosing it on the fwy (loose quick disconnect) and having cone damage because of trees (btw, I drill holes in the roof of all my vehicles! This is the best way to mount an antenna.), I replaced it with the Wilson 1000. There was a measurable difference although not enough to warrant the replacement of a functional K-40. Had I not broken my last K-40, I'd probably still be running one today.

One other thing, I like the Wilson 1000 mag mount set up better too! The K-40 could actually "tip" in the magnet of the K-40 where the "trunk mount" hooks up to the magnet.

The rest of your post was rude and doesn't deserve recognition. In your pursuit of knowledege, answer me this...

What is the "ohm" a measure of?

Did you say "resistance"? Now answer me this...

What is better, low resistance or high resistance?

Did you say LOW resistance? If you have "ZERO OHMS", does that mean you have no resistance? Would this be better for an antenna system?

You don't need me to spell it out for you, you are doing a fine job all on your own! Good job and keep after those books!

I'll tell you Dave, there are many out here who want the best of the best. All the serious operators in my area all run this antenna! A beam has its advantages and disadvantages...as does an omni.

I wanted the best omni money could buy. So I got the I10K. I could have ran a beam (I own two) but most of my comms are with the locals who are spread out all over the place. I even talk a bit of skip with no problem.

If I was a serious DXer, I'd get a beam...probably the Signal Engineering antenna.

A lot of guys will spend close to $1,000.00 for a good amp...some upwards of a couple thousand!

What it is worth depends on the operator. If the antenna sold for $300.00, I'd still buy it. Having the best omni for CB is worth it to me.

BTW, you won't see me spending $500.00+ for a Galaxy/RCI/etc... That is a waste of money in my opinion (but not to others)! I'll stick to my Bill Good modified Cobra 2000!

The best money spent on any radio system is the antenna! What you say isn't wrong and I'm not disagreeing with you at all. All I'm trying to say is that it is different per user.

Wow, you obviously don't know your antennas!

The Penetrator 500 uses a matching hairpin in the VERTICAL PLANE. This affects the radiation patter of the antenna. The driven element is also surrounded by the ground plane brackets and radials.

The I10K uses TWO trombones. The first is to fine tune the resonant frequency. The second is used for impeadance matching. The I10K also uses an ELEVATED FEED which lowered the capacitance of the feed system. This equates to more signal getting to the antenna. These trombones are in the HORIZONTAL PLANE of the radiated signal which does NOT affect the radiation pattern of the 5/8 element. The I10K has lower loss. Just these facts alone warrant the purchase of this antenna for me! If you want to compromise, thats up to you.

A true 5/8 antenna length is near impossible to match to a 50 ohm load. The reason for having an antenna length of 5/8 has everything to do with the WAVE RADIATION PATTERN. In order to match it, you need to bring the antenna to a 3/4 wave length (next 1/4 wave length). BUT, adding this length in the vertical plane would RUIN the radiation pattern! So by placing this "section" in the horizontal plane eliminates the affects on the vertical plane. You will see this on the Avanti igma 5/8 and the Maco V58 as a loop! (for this reason alone, I have always felt the Avanti was better than the Penetrator).

The I10K also uses top hat loading for improved performance. We already agree on the better construction of the antenna and the materials used.

One other point, Jay's claim of 2db is over the difference of the I10K and the Penetrator...NOT dbi or dbd! Jay only claims 3.x of dbd gain for his antenna based on it being a 5/8 wave ground plane. Basic antenna theory states that a 5/8 antenna has "x" amount of gain over dbi or dbd. This is true! But then there is the losses in the matching network. What Jay has learned is how to eliminate these losses! Less loss, better efficiency! Better efficiency, better performance!

Also, the I10K can take an honest 10,000 watts! I've talked on two 50,000 watt stations, KFI and KOA in Denver (via the phone) HA HA... Any way, you need better components to run that kind of power. This is what you get right out of the box! You don't need to buy that 5KW gamma like some other antennas. Better materials, better efficiency, better antenna!

The I10K is not for everyone! But if you want the best, the buck stops here!

At 10:20 pm eastern, we already have 6 inches at least. I went to shovel a path for the dog, and the snow was very light. Meaning we'll probably get 2 feet.

Mr. (?) keeps saying the same thing...

The matching networks ARE DIFFERENT! Also, the hairpin used (in the VERTICAL PLANE) is of a small diameter piece of steel. Does skin affect enter into the equation?....I think so.

A 5/8 wave ground plane will out perform any other omni antenna.

The MACO is better than anything coming out of Italy! The materials on the Italian antennas are very poor!

If you are real serious about the Maco V58, have someone TIG weld all the aluminum together in 10' sections. This eliminates hose clamps or screws (yuck!) and allows the antenna to be broken down for portability.

At the very least, have the first section of the ground radials TIG welded to the ground ring. This is a big failure point for the Maco in my experience.

If you have the cash and want the best, get the I10K. If you are looking at the fiberglass antennas, get the NBS-2010 or the IMAX 2000. Either way, give Bill's 2 Way a call for these!

You could always look for an old Avanti Sigma 5/8 or Hy-Gain Penetrator on someone's house and take it down and clean it up!

I'd buy a ground plane antenna in the following order...

I10K
Maco V5000
Maco V58
Shakespear NBS-2010
IMAX 2000

I wouldn't recommend anything else! BTW, the Sigma IV (looks like an ice cream cone with an antenna sticking out) is a nice antenna...but its only a half wave and doesn't perform as well as a 5/8 ground plane (I can hear the flames now!)

The best mobile antenna is the 9' steel whip. This is not very practical though.

After that, I really like the Wilson line of antennas! The Wilson 1000 will perform better than any fiberglass antenna. If the camper is on only part of the time, drill a hole in the roof and mount the Wilson 1000! I would then buy a Wilson Trucker antenna for the side of the camper and run the line into the truck when the camper is on. If you are having a matching problem, you can buy the "floating ground kit".

I would buy the fiberglass antennas as a last resort. This is personal preferance.

Ground your antenna tuner! You shouldn't need one with this 1/2 wave

This is an ignorant post, So was your last "challenge" post.

Antennas affect the amount of energy getting into consumer electronics. You should know this....who ever you are!

Also, people do run big power. I don't and you don't, but people do. Does the Corvette need to go over 100 MPH when that is illegal? No! But there is a market and Chevy is filling it.

Your posts and attemps to discredit people is the only thing "foolish" around here. I'd say take a shot at building antennas! If they are good, I might even buy one! My guess is that you will learn fast what it takes to build a quality antenna and what its costs.

I've ran the Firestik antennas. They work OK. If you are looking for a fiberglass antenna, I'd lean towards the Wilson antennas first.

If you want a real antenna, go with the Wilson 1000! It works real well! Do you take your Jeep off road? Where are you going to mount it?

What antenna is the best for your situation depends on many factors. I'd be glad to help you out!

In this case it is 700 watts PEP, it is up to you to decipher what the user means.

It's very similar to what car stereos

Well dave the CB norm is pep watts, the hardore guys call it rms when it is really average watts.

yeh all those towel head tyrants running around in their mercedes benzes and all that stuff.....who cares what they think.....they have had their way for too long.....let us not forget who built those damn oil fields over in that area.....it was the united states ....those camel jockeys couldn't pour piss out of a boot with the instructions on the heel.....so piss on them if they don't like this little shindig.....let's get it on.....soon sadaam will be dead.....him and all of his sons.....and on that my friend you can bet.....and many , many iraqis will celebrate his departure too.....a little taste of freedom ....that is what scarey to the middle east.....kind of shakes up the status quo doesn't it.???? kind of makes kings shake in their boots, knowing full well that once this ball starts rolling, there is no telling where it will stop.....iran is next.....it is ready.....full of unrest.....and saudi arabia also.....and of course our little buddies in jordan.....and syria of course .....all of these little kings are afraid.....because they know, they might soon , have to actually work for a living and the prospect of that, scares
the pants off of them.....these muslims need to understand something.....they can go on living in the 14th century if they want to, but the facts of the matter are this.....those with education and skills get ahead.....case closed.....and as soon as they realize this by being exposed to western capitilism and western ideas, they will throw their skull caps in the garbage and shed their robes for levis and polo shirts.....happens everytime.....

bush is no liar and no cheat........he prays on his knees and he means it. he goes to bed every night at 9:00 pm and sleeps with his wife and doesn't cheat on her......which is a lot more than i can say for the prior president we had.......who should have never been elected....

Well Cheese, you just amazed me! And yes, I do agree. Fuck the rest of the world. This is where we live, and we ARE the masters of the planet. So what if the rest of the world doesn't agree! They'll get over it and prosper from what we do. No problem. The status quo for much of the world sucks, and it's time it was upped a bit.

Randy, I agree with you and your counterpart from the big star cheesehead. the terorists fuqqed with us on our soil and a lesson needs learned by those countries that support terrorists, and are a dangerto us in the future. lets not wait for them to use WMD against us. They need to find out that we are not playing around and will defend ourselves aggresivly. We need To defend our Freedom!

America the greatest Country in the World .

Golf
There are these friends who play golf together every Saturday. One Saturday they are getting ready to tee off when a guy, by himself, asks if he can join them. The friends look at each other and then look at the guy and say, "Sure."

So they tee off. About two holes into the game, the friends get curious about what the guy does for a living. So they ask him. The stranger tells them he's a hitman. The friends all laugh.

The guy says, "No really, I am a hitman. My gun is in my golf bag. I carry it everywhere. You can take a look at it if you like."

So one of the friends decides to check it out. He opened the bag and, sure enough, there is a rifle with a huge scope attached. He gets all excited and says, "WOW! I bet I can see my house through here! May I look?" The hit man replies, "Sure."

So the guy looks for a second and says, "YEAH! You can see my house! I can even see through the windows into my bedroom. There's my wife, naked. Isn't she beautiful? WAIT! There's my next door neighbor! And he's naked too!"

This really upsets the guy, so he asks the hitman how much it would be for a hit. The hitman replies, "I get $1000 every time I pull the trigger."

The guy responds, "$1000??? Well, ok. I want two hits. I want you to shoot my wife right in the mouth. She's always nagging at me and I can't stand it. Second, I want you to shoot my neighbor in the penis, just for screwing around with my wife."

The hit man agrees, gears up and looks through the scope. He's looking for about five minutes until finally the man starts to get really impatient and asks, "What are you waiting for?!?

The hitman replies, "Just hold on..... I'm a about to save you a thousand bucks!"

How the United States failed the Iraqi resistance

Brandon Sprague
Sunday, February 16, 2003

San Francisco Chronicle

As an Iraqi American, Saif Ataya is a product of the American dream and, also, of one of its broken promises. He came to San Francisco from a Saudi Arabian desert camp in the middle of nowhere 10 years ago without enough money to buy a razor to shave his scraggly beard.

After living through what he calls his own personal holocaust - including the deaths of his mother and other family members - Ataya was happy to be in the United States. But then again, he was a refugee in large part due to U.S. policy gone awry.

It was the first President George Bush who had encouraged him - and hundreds of thousands of other oppressed Shiite Muslims in the south of Iraq - to rise up against Saddam Hussein immediately after the first Persian Gulf War.

U.S. support for a final coup de grace against Hussein seemed a given. Though some of the poorly-armed rebels briefly reached the gates of Baghdad, within 20 days the uprising was brutally suppressed. Thousands died. Many more fled the country.

Having won their war in Kuwait, the Americans - who had encouraged the uprising - sat idly by while Hussein used Scuds and chemical weapons and combat helicopters - which American officials allowed Iraq to operate under the Gulf War cease-fire agreement - against the ragtag rebels.

"I have seen it with my own eyes," says Ataya vehemently in his not quite perfect English. "I see two pictures actually. One is the Iraqi helicopters shooting us and then, above that, I see the F-16s all the way up, very small, the Americans watching all this atrocity that has been done."

Like many new immigrants in this country, Ataya worked hard immediately after landing on American soil - holding down two jobs and working 80-hour weeks, catching a little sleep on the bus which carried him from one job to the other. Ataya insists the money he got was a secondary benefit. He threw himself into endless toil mainly in order to forget.

The memories of the family he left back in his hometown haunt him the most. His mother died of a heart attack when the police came to the family home looking for Ataya after he deserted from the army. His brother was executed by the regime's secret service two decades ago for suggesting Hussein step down. Three of his sisters have also died since he left Iraq. No one has been able to tell him why.

Ataya has done well in America. He started out working in a grocery store. Now he owns one, which he runs during the week with his wife, Angelica. On weekends, he uses his real estate license and boyish charm to sell "dream homes."

But try as he might, Ataya cannot forget the past. It comes back to haunt him every time he turns on the TV and sees images of American troops massing in the gulf.

President George W. Bush is now poised to finish the work his father suddenly abandoned in the spring of 1991: overthrowing Hussein. In his State of the Union address, Bush included a special message for the "brave and oppressed people of Iraq," saying their leader - not the United States - was their enemy and when Hussein was gone the people would be liberated.

Indeed, many in the Bush administration are promising to bring democracy to a post-Hussein Iraq and liberation to its people. But it has proved far easier for us and our leaders than for Ataya to forget the way our government abandoned those same Iraqi people over a decade ago. At a time when U.S. troops are hoping to roll into Baghdad as welcomed liberators, to occupy and rebuild a country in our own image, we should all be reminded of this dark chapter in our mutual history.

Ataya recalls waking up one day in early March 1991 and finding the streets of his town littered with white flyers dropped by the Americans.

"Rise up, oh brothers," the flyers read in Arabic. "This is your time. The American armed forces will help you. We need your help to change for democracy and freedom."

Ataya and the young men of al Hilla, a Shiite Muslim-dominated town 150 miles south of Baghdad, agreed. It was their time.

Since the days of the Ottoman Empire, the Shiite Arab majority in the region had been controlled, oppressed and deprived of their rights by an unsympathetic minority in Baghdad. The systematic discrimination accelerated when Hussein's Ba'ath Party came to power after a 1968 coup. Shiite clerics and leaders were routinely imprisoned or executed.

Much of the wealth of the country came from enormous oil fields outside of Basra, but the Shiites of Basra seldom saw a single dinar flow back to the south.

Using what few weapons they had, the rebels stormed the town's Ba'ath Party headquarters. Many men in the regular army joined them. Within hours, al-Haila was in rebel hands, a scenario that was played out in town after town in the south of Iraq. Soon the Shiite rebels, joined by Kurds from the north, had reached the outskirts of Baghdad.

"We were 20 minutes away from the capital," Ataya says. "One more week and we would have been fine."

Najib al-Salhi, a general in the Iraqi army at the time of the uprising would agree, having seen things from the other side. The rebels were so close to toppling the regime "if the Americans or Arabs had helped them, Saddam would have been gone years ago," says al-Salhi, who subsequently fled Iraq and now lives in Washington, D.C.

In those few crucial weeks after the Iraqi armies were routed in Kuwait, however, U.S. policy seemed to undergo a sudden shift. The Bush administration apparently decided it was better to deal with a humbled dictator than with a group of rebels who could ultimately install a government in Baghdad even less to its liking.

But there was a price. Thousands of Shiites and Kurds were killed (al-Salhi believes 300,000 died) once Hussein's elite corps of Republican Guard forces regrouped and attacked the rebel towns - and the Americans did nothing.

One U.S. Gulf War-era defense analyst who spoke on condition of anonymity said, "I consider the slaughter of 1991 to be one of the blackest marks on our record."

There were many divergent views within the first Bush administration as to what to do about Hussein, he said. Some wanted to keep moving into Baghdad, but the United States was limited in its U.N. mandate - and George H.W. Bush's war aims - which only called for the expulsion of Iraqi soldiers from Kuwait.

Some within the administration thought they should keep Hussein in power as a counterweight against Iran. But the CIA, according to the analyst, pushed the idea that the Iraqi regime was teetering on the brink of collapse and that "all we have to have is an uprising and then one of the generals will shoot Saddam."

That -didn't happen. Instead of turning against Hussein, the main Iraqi army, beaten badly by the Americans, rallied around the cause of suppressing the rebellion.

"It was the saddest day of my life," the analyst said, adding that he argued against the move. "I knew what was going to happen because we were presenting the Iraqi (army) with this lovely opportunity to get all their frustrations out on the helpless."

Ataya and other survivors had little choice but to flee or die. More than 800,000 people streamed out of Iraq within three days.

"It was at the time the largest, swiftest mass exodus recorded in history," says Jeff Chenoweth of the Catholic Legal Immigration Network, who worked with the huge deluge of refugees. He noted that the record was only surpassed in Rwanda in the wake of the genocide three years later.

Ataya says he walked for 20 days through the Iraqi desert, using the night sky to guide him southeast, toward Saudi Arabia. His feet blistered and caked with blood, he kept himself alive with Kool-Aid powder he found in an abandoned U.S. army bag.

When he finally stumbled upon an American patrol in the border zone, he was 50 pounds lighter and nearly crazed by thirst. But he lived.

"You know that show 'Survivor'?" he asks. "You put me on that show and I win - easy."

The Americans, who were preparing to pull out of southern Iraq and Saudi Arabia, suddenly had thousands of displaced people on their hands. As the Americans departed, they turned the group - 32,000 refugees in all - over to the Saudi government.

"In doing so, we completely violated international law," says Lavinia Limon, director of the U.S. Committee for Refugees, adding that the Saudis are not signatories to the Geneva Convention on refugees or prisoners of war. "If I had another life to live after retirement, I would sue everyone on the winning side of the war in international court for this."

Ataya and the other refugees were deposited in makeshift camps in the Saudi desert, where they stayed for more than a year before anyone noticed them.

"We were getting desperate," Ataya says. "We'd been there for one year and four months with nothing to do. We -didn't even have a newspaper. Just giving me food, that's punishment to me. I'm not an animal."

In August 1992, the refugees staged a hunger strike, which led to deadly riots. Whether due to the protests or not, the United Nations set up an office in the camps within a month and began processing applications for resettlement.
Ataya was one of the first to be resettled to the United States.

More than 12,000 Iraqis came to these shores before the resettlement program was shut down in 1997, with more than 5,000 Atayas still languishing in Rafha, the Saudi camp.

The Saudis have provided the Iraqis with many creature comforts, but they are still stuck in a wasteland six miles from the Iraqi border, which may soon become the front line in a new war on Iraq.

"We feel we did the major share of the work in Rafha," said Theresa Rusche, director of admissions in the Department of State's Bureau of Population, Refugees and Migration, adding that many of the refugees in the camp initially -didn't show up for interviews and seemed ambivalent about resettling in the United States. "So they had their shot."

Moreover, following the Sept. 11 attacks, the Immigration and Naturalization Service was focusing on populations in other regions, such as Africa. "Of course, that might change again in three months, who knows?" Rusche said.

But some refugee agency workers say the story of the Rafha refugees is crucial to the debate about another conflict in Iraq.

"Here we have the U.S. about to launch a war against Saddam Hussein because he's such a brutal dictator," says Limon, who was a part of the now defunct resettlement program. "The Bush administration is talking about democracy, but as long as Rafha is sitting out there, who can believe the U.S. gives a damn about the people of Iraq?"

Given the American track record, Ataya -doesn't trust the Bush administration to create a democratic Iraq. What he fears, in the wake of a successful war unseating Hussein, is a continuation of suppression and terror - just in another name.

"One and a half million people in Iraq have died already," he says. "How much more can they give? If there is a war, then more will die, and who will come after that? It will be the same struggle."

Brandon Sprague wrote this story for the UC Berkeley Graduate School of Journalism, where he is a student.

Oil Sluts: Bush and Sheney

"Evil" was ignored when "Uncle Dick", at the helm of Halliburton, benefitted from a lucrative contract with Iraq under Saddam Hussein; and supported Unocal's negotiations with Osama bin Laden and the Taliban to build a pipeline through Afghanistan. Cheney's Money Has Roots in Evil

Our president has made it abundantly clear that Iraq's Saddam Hussein is the ringleader of what he calls the axis of evil.

Whether that's indeed the case is something that undoubtedly will play out during the coming months as the United States continues its war on terrorism.

What's strange, though, is that George Bush's own vice president, Dick Cheney, apparently didn't see either Iraq or Saddam as a big problem when he was making billions for Halliburton Inc. and millions for himself only a few years ago. Halliburton's role, under Cheney's direction, was first outlined in a detailed story in the San Francisco Bay Guardian during the 2000 election campaign and has since been reported in other publications.

"During former Defense Secretary Richard Cheney's five-year tenure as chief executive of Halliburton Inc., his oil services firm raked in big bucks from dubious commercial dealings with Iraq. Cheney left Halliburton with a $34 million retirement package," the Guardian's Martin Lee wrote.

"Of course, U.S. firms aren't generally supposed to do business with Saddam Hussein," he continued. "But thanks to legal loopholes large enough to steer an oil tanker through, Halliburton profited big-time from deals with the Iraqi dictatorship. Conducted discreetly through several subsidiaries in Europe, the transactions helped Saddam Hussein retain his grip on power." He went on to explain that Halliburton was among more than a dozen American firms that supplied Iraq's petroleum industry with spare parts and helped retool its oil rigs after the Gulf War and after U.N. sanctions were eased in 1998.

The Financial Times of London has estimated that between September of 1998 and the winter of 1999-2000, Cheney, as CEO of Halliburton, oversaw $23.8 million of business contracts for the sale of oil-industry equipment and services to Iraq through two of its subsidiaries, Dresser Rand and Ingersoll-Dresser Pump. Under Cheney, Halliburton became the United States' largest oil services company and the fifth largest military contractor. Just another example, apparently, of Treasury Secretary Paul O'Neill's "beauty of capitalism."

When it comes to making big money, who cares about evil?

--by Dave Zweifel, Madison Capital Times, 5 JUN 02 America's pipe dream

A pro-western regime in Kabul should give the US an Afghan route for Caspian oil

"Is there any man, is there any woman, let me say any child here," Woodrow Wilson asked a year after the first world war ended, "that does not know that the seed of war in the modern world is industrial and commercial rivalry?" In 1919, as US citizens watched a shredded Europe scraping up its own remains, the answer may well have been no. But the lessons of war never last for long. The invasion of Afghanistan was certainly a campaign against terrorism, but it may also have been a late colonial adventure. British ministers have warned MPs that opposing the war is the moral equivalent of appeasing Hitler, but in some respects our moral choices are closer to those of 1956 than those of 1938. Afghanistan is as indispensable to the regional control and transport of oil in central Asia as Egypt was in the Middle East.

Afghanistan has some oil and gas of its own, but not enough to qualify as a major strategic concern. Its northern neighbours, by contrast, contain reserves which could be critical to future global supply. In 1998, Dick Cheney, now US vice-president but then chief executive of a major oil services company (Halliburton), remarked: "I cannot think of a time when we have had a region emerge as suddenly to become as strategically significant as the Caspian." But the oil and gas there is worthless until it is moved. The only route which makes both political and economic sense is through Afghanistan.

Transporting all the Caspian basin's fossil fuel through Russia or Azerbaijan would greatly enhance Russia's political and economic control over the central Asian republics, which is precisely what the west has spent 10 years trying to prevent. Piping it through Iran would enrich a regime which the US has been seeking to isolate. Sending it the long way round through China, quite aside from the strategic considerations, would be prohibitively expensive. But pipelines through Afghanistan would allow the US both to pursue its aim of "diversifying energy supply" and to penetrate the world's most lucrative markets. Growth in European oil consumption is slow and competition is intense. In south Asia, by contrast, demand is booming and competitors are scarce. Pumping oil south and selling it in Pakistan and India, in other words, is far more profitable than pumping it west and selling it in Europe.

As the author Ahmed Rashid has documented, in 1995 the US oil company Unocal started negotiating to build oil and gas pipelines from Turkmenistan, through Afghanistan and into Pakistani ports on the Arabian sea. The company's scheme required a single administration in Afghanistan, which would guarantee safe passage for its goods. Soon after the Taliban took Kabul in September 1996, the Telegraph reported that "oil industry insiders say the dream of securing a pipeline across Afghanistan is the main reason why Pakistan, a close political ally of America's, has been so supportive of the Taliban, and why America has quietly acquiesced in its conquest of Afghanistan". Unocal invited some of the leaders of the Taliban to Houston, where they were royally entertained. The company suggested paying these barbarians 15 cents for every thousand cubic feet of gas it pumped through the land they had conquered.

For the first year of Taliban rule, US policy towards the regime appears to have been determined principally by Unocal's interests. In 1997 a US diplomat told Rashid "the Taliban will probably develop like the Saudis did. There will be Aramco [the former US oil consortium in Saudi Arabia] pipelines, an emir, no parliament and lots of Sharia law. We can live with that." US policy began to change only when feminists and greens started campaigning against both Unocal's plans and the government's covert backing for Kabul. Even so, as a transcript of a congress hearing now circulating among war resisters shows, Unocal failed to get the message. In February 1998, John Maresca, its head of international relations, told representatives that the growth in demand for energy in Asia and sanctions against Iran determined that Afghanistan remained "the only other possible route" for Caspian oil. The company, once the Afghan government was recognised by foreign diplomats and banks, still hoped to build a 1,000-mile pipeline, which would carry a million barrels a day. Only in December 1998, four months after the embassy bombings in east Africa, did Unocal drop its plans.

But Afghanistan's strategic importance has not changed, even with Iraq in the picture. In September 2001, a few days before the attack on New York, the US energy information administration reported that "Afghanistan's significance from an energy standpoint stems from its geographical position as a potential transit route for oil and natural gas exports from central Asia to the Arabian sea. This potential includes the possible construction of oil and natural gas export pipelines through Afghanistan". Given that US GOVERNMENT IS DOMINATED BY former OIL INDUSTRY EXECUTIVES, we would be foolish to suppose that such plans no longer figure in its strategic thinking. As the researcher Keith Fisher has pointed out, the possible economic outcomes of the war in Iraq mirror the possible economic outcomes of the war in the Balkans, where the development of "Corridor 8", an economic zone built around a pipeline carrying oil and gas from the Caspian to Europe, is a critical allied concern.

American foreign policy is governed by the doctrine of "full-spectrum dominance", which means that the US should control military, economic and political development worldwide. China has responded by seeking to expand its interests in central Asia. The defence white paper Beijing published last year argued that "China's fundamental interests lie in ... the establishment and maintenance of a new regional security order". In June, China and Russia pulled four central Asian republics into a "Shanghai cooperation organisation". Its purpose, according to Jiang Zemin, is to "foster world multi-polarisation", by which he means contesting US full-spectrum dominance.

We have argued on these pages about whether terrorism is likely to be deterred or encouraged by the invasion of Iraq, or whether the plight of the starving there will be relieved or exacerbated by attempts to destroy Hussein. But neither of these considerations describes the full scope and purpose of this war. As John Flynn wrote in 1944: "The enemy aggressor is always pursuing a course of larceny, murder, rapine and barbarism. We are always moving forward with high mission, a destiny imposed by the Deity to regenerate our victims while incidentally capturing their markets, to civilise savage and senile and paranoid peoples while blundering accidentally into their oil wells." I believe that the US government is genuine in its attempt to stamp out terrorism by military force in Iraq, however misguided that may be. But we would be naïve to believe that this is all it is doing. --by George Monbiot, The Guardian, 23 OCT 01 Report Alleges US Role in Angola Arms-for-Oil Scandal As the US Congress continues its investigation of the Enron affair, human rights advocates are calling for a probe of the Bush administration's possible role in another energy and influence-peddling scandal. According to a recent report by the British-based non-governmental organization Global Witness, Bush and US oil interests have ties to some of the key figures in the arms-for-oil scandal which has devastated Angola.

Known as "Angolagate" in France, the scandal involves arms-for-oil deals between French businessman Pierre Falcone, the head of a firm called Brenco International; his colleague Jean-Christophe Mitterand, the son of the former French president; and a Russian-born Israeli named Arkadi Gaydamak.

According to "All the Presidents' Men," a March 25 report on Angolagate by Global Witness, Gaydamak funneled billions of dollars in arms and oil-backed loans to Angola's government in return for lucrative oil contracts with Western oil companies. Falcone and Gaydamak, relying on the special access that Mitterand had to the Angolan government, managed to transfer some $463 million in arms to Angola. The net effect of the Angolan arms buildup was the scrapping of the 1994 Lusaka Peace Agreement between Angolan President Jose Eduardo dos Santos and long-time UNITA rebel leader Jonas Savimbi, a one-time favorite of the Central Intelligence Agency and a person who President Reagan once hailed as the "George Washington of Angola." The newly-armed Angolan Army -- supported by an array of US-based private mercenary companies like MPRI and AirScan -- went on a bloody offensive against UNITA in 1998 and was eventually able to push Savimbi's rebels further into the jungles in the eastern part of the country. This compelled UNITA to mine and sell more diamonds on the black market to buy arms. The trade in "blood diamonds," in turn, led to a number of human rights abuses by UNITA. Ironically, Savimbi -- Reagan's George Washington of Africa -- was gunned down by Angolan Army troops in a remote area of Angola on February 22, the birthday of America's first president.

According to Global Witness, the links between Angola's corrupt government and the Bush administration are just as odorous as those linking Luanda's leadership to past and current members of the French government, both Socialist and Gaullist. In addition to the French oil giant Total-Fina-Elf, oil companies like Chevron, Texaco, Philipps Petroleum, Exxon Mobil, and BP-Amoco -- all with close links to Bush and his White House oil team -- were heavily involved in propping up dos Santos in return for profitable off-shore oil concessions.

After transferring some $770 million in oil revenues to their own private bank accounts, dos Santos and his cronies became convinced that pluralism in their country would be a very dangerous thing for their future business deals. They also quickly abandoned their former Marxist beliefs in favor of the type of capitalist principles embraced by George W. Bush and Jacques Chirac. Paris, Texas

There are similarities between dos Santos' new relationship with George W. Bush and the Bush family's historical ties to the House of Saud. Both represent the murky nature of oil politics that places US economic, national security, and human rights interests far behind the priority assigned to ensuring maximum corporate profits for a tight-knit and secretive international oil fraternity. Just as Bush's past financial links to the Bin Laden family have been exposed by the media, so too have his links to Angolagate and Falcone. Falcone's wife, Sonia, a former Miss Bolivia and a friend of First Lady Laura Bush, became a big-ticket contributor to Bush's 2000 election campaign. Contributions were made to the campaign through Sonia's Essanté Corporation, a distributor of health, beauty, and sexual pleasure products (such as a cream called Entisse that Essanté's web site says is guaranteed to duplicate the effects of Viagra).

In 2000, Esssanté, which is linked to Falcone's arms trafficking Brenco through the same corporate addresses and shareholding accounts in the United Kingdom and British Virgin Islands, respectively, gave the GOP and Bush campaign over $100,000. Sonia was also an early supporter of Bush. Federal Election Commission records reveal she was on board with a $1000 contribution to Bush's presidential exploratory committee on April 14, 1999. She also rubbed shoulders with George H. W. Bush at an October 6, 2000 fundraiser -- a Bush campaign event that netted $10,000 per person.

Only after Newsweek and The Arizona Republic published details of Falcone's international arms dealing involving Gaydamak was the money returned by the GOP to Essanté, and then only a few days prior to Bush's inauguration. The money, of course, was available to Bush all during the contested Florida election and the state and federal Supreme Court battles. The Republican National Committee said in a statement that the money was returned to "avoid the appearance of impropriety."

More noteworthy, just before Falcone was arrested in France in December 2000 (along with Mitterand's son), police discovered computer files that included a letter from Falcone inviting then-candidate Bush to meet with dos Santos at Falcone's Arizona Paradise Valley ranch. Although there is no record of such a meeting taking place, Bush did host dos Santos at the White House shortly after the killing of Savimbi. The timing of this meeting raises serious questions about the transfer of money to Bush's campaign coffers and its impact on changing the Republican Party's long-held policy of support for Savimbi.

It is also interesting that one of Bush's top Arizona campaign officials, State Senator Scott Bundgaard, arranged for Sonia Falcone to meet Bush at Phoenix Airport just after Essanté dropped one down payment of $20,000 into Bush's campaign chest. According to Global Witness, there is good reason to believe the donations to Bush were actually made by Pierre Falcone himself using "coded accounts" maintained at the UBS Bank in Switzerland, Bank Leumiin Tel Aviv, and Banque Rothschild in Monaco.

The Cheney Connection

The Global Witness report also reveals that French investigators discovered questionable links between the Angolan government and Vice President Dick Cheney's old firm Halliburton and its subsidiary Brown & Root. The investigators believe Halliburton's success in Angola is tied to Falcone's intercessions with Luanda: actions that would have directly benefited Cheney when he headed the firm between 1995 and 2000. According to an Associated Press report on October 26, 2000, the US Embassy in Luanda assisted Halliburton in securing a $68 million US Export-Import Bank loan for Angola in 1998, during the height of much of the arms running activity between dos Santos, Falcone and Gaydamak. The AP cited a cable from the US Embassy in Luanda to Secretary of State Madeleine Albright that states, "Our commercial officer literally camped out at the offices of the national oil company, petroleum ministry and central bank, unraveling snag after snag to obtain the transfer of funds . . . The bottom line: thousands of American jobs and a foot in the door for Halliburton to win even bigger contracts."

Cheney, a one-time supporter of UNITA, appears to have changed his mind after the former CIA-backed guerrillas were deemed a threat to US oil interests. Savimbi, like Laurent Kabila and Joseph Mobutu of Congo, Panama's Manuel Noriega, and Iraq's Sadaam Hussein, became just another disposable CIA asset who outlived his usefulness.

Another Bush confidant who had a vested interest in propping up dos Santos is Bush National Security Adviser Condoleezza Rice. A former Chevron director and, until recently, the namesake of a Chevron supertanker, the SS Condoleezza Rice (since renamed the SS Altair Voyager), Rice would have had good reason to see Angola stabilized under the dos Santos regime and permanently eliminate the UNITA threat to her old employer.

Perhaps the most ironic link described in the Global Witness report is one involving the former "fugitive financier" Marc Rich. He appears as a major player in the arms-for-oil scandal through a Swiss-based oil trading company named Glencore. The firm played a major role in guaranteeing a total of $1 billion in oil-backed loans for Angola in 1998. The first set of oil-backed loans in 1993 involved Glencore, Falcone, and Gaydamak. Soon after, Gaydamak arranged for the sale of Russian helicopters and ammunition through a Slovak company called ZTS-OSOS. The 1998 billion-dollar loan deal included the Export-Import Bank loans being pushed by Halliburton and Cheney. The GOP conveniently seized on President Clinton's pardon of Rich without describing the vice president's links to the fugitive financier's vast international money-lending and influence-peddling empire.

The ties of President Chirac's administration to Angolagate are as clear as those of other leading French politicians -- right and left, Socialist and Gaullist. What is not clear is what Chirac and President-elect Bush spoke about on December 18, 2000 in Washington, DC at the French Embassy in an unprecedented meeting between a president-elect and a foreign leader in a foreign diplomatic mission. Coming just four days after the Supreme Court handed the White House to Bush, the Bush-Chirac meeting took on an even greater aura of mystery.

Was it merely coincidental that Chirac was the first foreign leader to meet with America's dauphin, even prior to Bush's inauguration? Reportedly, a number of French prosecutors who investigated Angolagate would like to know the answer. Hold the Phone

There is yet another disturbing element involved in Bush's ties to dos Santos. Global Witness reports that there was a secret agreement between the French firm Communications et Systémes, the French Defense Ministry, and dos Santos to acquire during 2000 two types of communications monitoring equipment suites to triangulate the location of Savimbi's GSM cell and satellite telephone calls in the Angolan bush. The two systems -- Murene (for GSM calls) and Menta (for satellite calls), were supposed to help dos Santos' forces locate Savimbi's constantly moving jungle headquarters. Apparently, the multimillion dollar systems were not all that helpful in locating Savimbi. However, legitimate questions exist about what U.S. official and unofficial intelligence resources were brought to bear on the recalcitrant ex-US. ally Savimbi. Under CIA Director George Tenet's new authority to eliminate terrorists listed in his "worldwide attack matrix," it is open season on anyone the U.S. brands a terrorist. According to US government sources, Savimbi was tracked by the military forces of U.S. NATO ally Portugal, who were aided by private mercenaries from Israel and South Africa. Jardo Muekalia, who headed UNITA's Washington office until it was forced to close in 1997, says that that the military forces that ultimately succeeded in assassinating Savimbi were supported by commercial satellite imagery and other intelligence support provided by Houston-based Brown & Root, Cheney's old outfit. Both the State Department and Pentagon vehemently deny any US government role in the killing of Savimbi.

But the US frequently uses such intelligence wizardry to help track down troublesome leaders. In 1996, according to US and British intelligence sources, the NSA may have passed on location data to the Russians on the location of Chechen President Dzhokar Dudayev (he was struck by an air-to-surface missile while talking on his satellite phone). In 1999, the New York Times reported that Turkey captured Kurdish Workers' Party leader Abdallah Ocalan after his cell phone location data was tracked by U.S., British, and Israeli intelligence agents.

It is not only Angola where the oil interests of Falcone and Bush coincide. Falcone's Brenco also has significant interests in Colombia and Venezuela, two recent bastions of CIA and US paramilitary activity in support of US oil interests in the region. Gaydamak has also been involved in business with Falcone in Latin America since 1993.

Interestingly, although Interpol on January 11, 2001 issued an arrest warrant for Gaydamak, he continues to travel between Israel, the United Kingdom, and South America using his Israeli, Canadian, and Angolan passports, eluding police, and passing from capital to capital with the full support of the Israeli government. Falcone and Mitterand's son have already been arrested and released on bail in France. If the Bush administration is really interested in tracking down and bringing to justice people involved in funding terrorism, like that which has occurred for years in Angola, it might pressure Israel to end its diplomatic protection of Gaydamak and cooperate with Interpol in bringing him to justice. However, considering the fact that so many members of the Bush administration appear to have links to Angolagate, such a prospect appears bleak.

And what has continuation of warfare to the benefit of oil companies meant for Angola? The consequences are dire:

Angola is one of the poorest countries in the world.

Famine is increasing throughout the country with one child dying of malnutrition and associated diseases every three minutes.

Life expectancy is 45 years in a country that earned $5 billion in oil revenues in 2001.

The Angolan Civil War has resulted in the deaths of over half a million people and 3.1 people becoming refugees. Tens of thousands of children have been maimed by land mines.

In any case, Bush's so-called "compassionate conservatism," has been a myth for the people of Angola and a windfall for oily business friends like the Falcones and Ken Lays of the world. The Bush administration does not appear to be bothered by the havoc being wrought by oil company cartels on the countries of Africa. --by Wayne Madsen, a Washington-based journalist who covers intelligence, national security, and foreign affairs. Oil Sluts: Bush and Sheney

"Evil" was ignored when "Uncle Dick", at the helm of Halliburton, benefitted from a lucrative contract with Iraq under Saddam Hussein; and supported Unocal's negotiations with Osama bin Laden and the Taliban to build a pipeline through Afghanistan. Cheney's Money Has Roots in Evil

Our president has made it abundantly clear that Iraq's Saddam Hussein is the ringleader of what he calls the axis of evil.

Whether that's indeed the case is something that undoubtedly will play out during the coming months as the United States continues its war on terrorism.

What's strange, though, is that George Bush's own vice president, Dick Cheney, apparently didn't see either Iraq or Saddam as a big problem when he was making billions for Halliburton Inc. and millions for himself only a few years ago. Halliburton's role, under Cheney's direction, was first outlined in a detailed story in the San Francisco Bay Guardian during the 2000 election campaign and has since been reported in other publications.

"During former Defense Secretary Richard Cheney's five-year tenure as chief executive of Halliburton Inc., his oil services firm raked in big bucks from dubious commercial dealings with Iraq. Cheney left Halliburton with a $34 million retirement package," the Guardian's Martin Lee wrote.

"Of course, U.S. firms aren't generally supposed to do business with Saddam Hussein," he continued. "But thanks to legal loopholes large enough to steer an oil tanker through, Halliburton profited big-time from deals with the Iraqi dictatorship. Conducted discreetly through several subsidiaries in Europe, the transactions helped Saddam Hussein retain his grip on power." He went on to explain that Halliburton was among more than a dozen American firms that supplied Iraq's petroleum industry with spare parts and helped retool its oil rigs after the Gulf War and after U.N. sanctions were eased in 1998.

The Financial Times of London has estimated that between September of 1998 and the winter of 1999-2000, Cheney, as CEO of Halliburton, oversaw $23.8 million of business contracts for the sale of oil-industry equipment and services to Iraq through two of its subsidiaries, Dresser Rand and Ingersoll-Dresser Pump. Under Cheney, Halliburton became the United States' largest oil services company and the fifth largest military contractor. Just another example, apparently, of Treasury Secretary Paul O'Neill's "beauty of capitalism."

When it comes to making big money, who cares about evil?

A pro-western regime in Kabul should give the US an Afghan route for Caspian oil

"Is there any man, is there any woman, let me say any child here," Woodrow Wilson asked a year after the first world war ended, "that does not know that the seed of war in the modern world is industrial and commercial rivalry?" In 1919, as US citizens watched a shredded Europe scraping up its own remains, the answer may well have been no. But the lessons of war never last for long. The invasion of Afghanistan was certainly a campaign against terrorism, but it may also have been a late colonial adventure. British ministers have warned MPs that opposing the war is the moral equivalent of appeasing Hitler, but in some respects our moral choices are closer to those of 1956 than those of 1938. Afghanistan is as indispensable to the regional control and transport of oil in central Asia as Egypt was in the Middle East.

Afghanistan has some oil and gas of its own, but not enough to qualify as a major strategic concern. Its northern neighbours, by contrast, contain reserves which could be critical to future global supply. In 1998, Dick Cheney, now US vice-president but then chief executive of a major oil services company (Halliburton), remarked: "I cannot think of a time when we have had a region emerge as suddenly to become as strategically significant as the Caspian." But the oil and gas there is worthless until it is moved. The only route which makes both political and economic sense is through Afghanistan.

Transporting all the Caspian basin's fossil fuel through Russia or Azerbaijan would greatly enhance Russia's political and economic control over the central Asian republics, which is precisely what the west has spent 10 years trying to prevent. Piping it through Iran would enrich a regime which the US has been seeking to isolate. Sending it the long way round through China, quite aside from the strategic considerations, would be prohibitively expensive. But pipelines through Afghanistan would allow the US both to pursue its aim of "diversifying energy supply" and to penetrate the world's most lucrative markets. Growth in European oil consumption is slow and competition is intense. In south Asia, by contrast, demand is booming and competitors are scarce. Pumping oil south and selling it in Pakistan and India, in other words, is far more profitable than pumping it west and selling it in Europe.

As the author Ahmed Rashid has documented, in 1995 the US oil company Unocal started negotiating to build oil and gas pipelines from Turkmenistan, through Afghanistan and into Pakistani ports on the Arabian sea. The company's scheme required a single administration in Afghanistan, which would guarantee safe passage for its goods. Soon after the Taliban took Kabul in September 1996, the Telegraph reported that "oil industry insiders say the dream of securing a pipeline across Afghanistan is the main reason why Pakistan, a close political ally of America's, has been so supportive of the Taliban, and why America has quietly acquiesced in its conquest of Afghanistan". Unocal invited some of the leaders of the Taliban to Houston, where they were royally entertained. The company suggested paying these barbarians 15 cents for

For the first year of Taliban rule, US policy towards the regime appears to have been determined principally by Unocal's interests. In 1997 a US diplomat told Rashid "the Taliban will probably develop like the Saudis did. There will be Aramco [the former US oil consortium in Saudi Arabia] pipelines, an emir, no parliament and lots of Sharia law. We can live with that." US policy began to change only when feminists and greens started campaigning against both Unocal's plans and the government's covert backing for Kabul. Even so, as a transcript of a congress hearing now circulating among war resisters shows, Unocal failed to get the message. In February 1998, John Maresca, its head of international relations, told representatives that the growth in demand for energy in Asia and sanctions against Iran determined that Afghanistan remained "the only other possible route" for Caspian oil. The company, once the Afghan government was recognised by foreign diplomats and banks, still hoped to build a 1,000-mile pipeline, which would carry a million barrels a day. Only in December 1998, four months after the embassy bombings in east Africa, did Unocal drop its plans.

But Afghanistan's strategic importance has not changed, even with Iraq in the picture. In September 2001, a few days before the attack on New York, the US energy information administration reported that "Afghanistan's significance from an energy standpoint stems from its geographical position as a potential transit route for oil and natural gas exports from central Asia to the Arabian sea. This potential includes the possible construction of oil and natural gas export pipelines through Afghanistan". Given that US GOVERNMENT IS DOMINATED BY former OIL INDUSTRY EXECUTIVES, we would be foolish to suppose that such plans no longer figure in its strategic thinking. As the researcher Keith Fisher has pointed out, the possible economic outcomes of the war in Iraq mirror the possible economic outcomes of the war in the Balkans, where the development of "Corridor 8", an economic zone built around a pipeline carrying oil and gas from the Caspian to Europe, is a critical allied concern.

American foreign policy is governed by the doctrine of "full-spectrum dominance", which means that the US should control military, economic and political development worldwide. China has responded by seeking to expand its interests in central Asia. The defence white paper Beijing published last year argued that "China's fundamental interests lie in ... the establishment and maintenance of a new regional security order". In June, China and Russia pulled four central Asian republics into a "Shanghai cooperation organisation". Its purpose, according to Jiang Zemin, is to "foster world multi-polarisation", by which he means contesting US full-spectrum dominance.

We have argued on these pages about whether terrorism is likely to be deterred or encouraged by the invasion of Iraq, or whether the plight of the starving there will be relieved or exacerbated by attempts to destroy Hussein. But neither of these considerations describes the full scope and purpose of this war. As John Flynn wrote in 1944: "The enemy aggressor is always pursuing a course of larceny, murder, rapine and barbarism. We are always moving forward with high mission, a destiny imposed by the Deity to regenerate our victims while incidentally capturing their markets, to civilise savage and senile and paranoid peoples while blundering accidentally into their oil wells." I believe that the US government is genuine in its attempt to stamp out terrorism by military force in Iraq, however misguided that may be. But we would be naïve to believe that this is all it is doing. --by George Monbiot, The Guardian, 23 OCT 01 Report Alleges US Role in Angola Arms-for-Oil Scandal As the US Congress continues its investigation of the Enron affair, human rights advocates are calling for a probe of the Bush administration's possible role in another energy and influence-peddling scandal. According to a recent report by the British-based non-governmental organization Global Witness, Bush and US oil interests have ties to some of the key figures in the arms-for-oil scandal which has devastated Angola.

Known as "Angolagate" in France, the scandal involves arms-for-oil deals between French businessman Pierre Falcone, the head of a firm called Brenco International; his colleague Jean-Christophe Mitterand, the son of the former French president; and a Russian-born Israeli named Arkadi Gaydamak.

According to "All the Presidents' Men," a March 25 report on Angolagate by Global Witness, Gaydamak funneled billions of dollars in arms and oil-backed loans to Angola's government in return for lucrative oil contracts with Western oil companies. Falcone and Gaydamak, relying on the special access that Mitterand had to the Angolan government, managed to transfer some $463 million in arms to Angola. The net effect of the Angolan arms buildup was the scrapping of the 1994 Lusaka Peace Agreement between Angolan President Jose Eduardo dos Santos and long-time UNITA rebel leader Jonas Savimbi, a one-time favorite of the Central Intelligence Agency and a person who President Reagan once hailed as the "George Washington of Angola." The newly-armed Angolan Army -- supported by an array of US-based private mercenary companies like MPRI and AirScan -- went on a bloody offensive against UNITA in 1998 and was eventually able to push Savimbi's rebels further into the jungles in the eastern part of the country. This compelled UNITA to mine and sell more diamonds on the black market to buy arms. The trade in "blood diamonds," in turn, led to a number of human rights abuses by UNITA. Ironically, Savimbi -- Reagan's George Washington of Africa -- was gunned down by Angolan Army troops in a remote area of Angola on February 22, the birthday of America's first president.

According to Global Witness, the links between Angola's corrupt government and the Bush administration are just as odorous as those linking Luanda's leadership to past and current members of the French government, both Socialist and Gaullist. In addition to the French oil giant Total-Fina-Elf, oil companies like Chevron, Texaco, Philipps Petroleum, Exxon Mobil, and BP-Amoco -- all with close links to Bush and his White House oil team -- were heavily involved in propping up dos Santos in return for profitable off-shore oil concessions.

After transferring some $770 million in oil revenues to their own private bank accounts, dos Santos and his cronies became convinced that pluralism in their country would be a very dangerous thing for their future business deals. They also quickly abandoned their former Marxist beliefs in favor of the type of capitalist principles embraced by George W. Bush and Jacques Chirac. Paris, Texas

There are similarities between dos Santos' new relationship with George W. Bush and the Bush family's historical ties to the House of Saud. Both represent the murky nature of oil politics that places US economic, national security, and human rights interests far behind the priority assigned to ensuring maximum corporate profits for a tight-knit and secretive international oil fraternity. That's because your thoughts are usually clouded by poor judgement. I have always set forth the truth about everything. Merely echoing Dogie haven't received many responses.....try digging the manner in which you post. You have some decent radio information at times, but as illustrated, your judgement and agenda is not up to par. The message doesn't matter where it originates, especially if one agrees. It is the art of a skillful communicator that can effectively debate a subject without entering personal feelings of inferiority that shine through your posts, intetnional or not. Now that you have wasted no time in insults, I truly hope you have the maturity level to move on from your games. If not, you are to be ignored, once again..You come out here and the first thing out of your mouth is something condescending. You're warned once..if you can debate and discuss without getting personal or sharing your unwanted personal feelings about the messenger or poster, we can get along just fine. Your future responses will telegraph your intention.

Hello Torbjorn

Here in Germany Channels 24, 25, 52, 53, 76 and 77 are described as "digimode" Channels. Well, it's usually packet radio what you can find there. But since 1998 (new laws...) nearly every digimode is allowed, that you can do in FM without modificating your rig.
If you want to try other modes like PSK or WSJT you can look for so called ISM-bands. In Germany we have for instance one from 26957.00 to 27283.00kHz. For ISM-regulations you have to use a maximum carrier power of 10mW. That's not much though, but you are allowed to do there everything you want to... ;-)
My proposal to you is: Look for those ISM-Bands in your country. There will surely be other laws on them but it is a good way to get running...

character had a saying in it.....'adapt and improvise'.....good advice these days when so-called allies try to put the screws to you.....let us not forget how many died in ww2 because of france and germany and how many died in vietname because of france.....let us not forget.....now is a perfect time to topple the regimes in the middle east that control the oil prices and make them more in our image,.....now is the time to drive a wedge between old europe and new europe.....remove all of our troops from germany now.....remove them from korea also. the south koreans have a well trained well equipped 600,000 man army.....let them do their own guard work...and if they need help, we can send north korea some care packages via submarine that will light their world up.....it is....just that easy.....restation our men in places where they are wanted.....like spain.....the spanish have helped us.....go there, build bases and nuclear capabilities to make old europe think about it. because of this i want us to be a thorn in their side forever.....no doubt about it.....

Absolutely right... you must discern between Watts and PEP Watts...
there is a large difference between the two measurements.

Probably nastier than you might think... the TS667 has a crude bias source that is unregulated. This presents problems at higher drive levels where the bias is actually shut off or greatly dimished by the input drive signal.

I agree 100%... and I might add one comment about the 9' whip. It's only better than the Wilson1000 if you are able to mount it in an optimum position on the vehicle. Mounting the whip on the trunk (where very directional) and the Wilson1000 on the center of the roof, will make the Wilson the clear winner.

you know.......ice.....when i think about this guy i have to ask myself ,..........why???? why???? he had it all and threw it all away ......imagine......coming from a poor broken home in the poorest state in the union.......went to the best schools......rose up through the ranks , became governor of the state, then president of the united states.....and when you look for any real evidence of character and relevance, you see nothing......a void..........the man is a empty vessle , a empty shell, with a smile on his face and a quick answer for any question you ask him but then there is inner self and you see.......nothing...........what a shame.......what a damn shame.....i hate to see all of the accomplishments he made educationally, etc...go to such a waste and they have actually.......been wasted.....he wasted his life attempting to be someone else, and not himself. and the problem is that a man who is looking for himself, does not belong in the presidency of the united states.........he did tremendous damage to our country during a time when americans were busy making money and not paying attention to what he was doing.......he should have never been president....and now he searches for a positive legacy......and it alludes him because his legacy is something he does not want to face.........it is monica, and chinagate, and impeachment and lying under oath, and bombing a aspirin factory in the sudan, etc, etc....and so on , and so on.......things he himself does not wish to remember but will be remembered by all of us.........that is his legacy....so now he appears on the larry king show almost every week seems like pointing his finger and trying to be relevant, during these trying times....now he is a joke.......a caricature of himself.......a bad memory......i wish he would just go away and live us alone and just go do his speaking engagment thing making tons of money from chumps who want to pay it...........but in my book ......he was and will aways be irrelevant and i wish somehow in this case we didn't have to pay his retirement pension.................

Come on down, man. This is truly the time of the year that makes it all worthwhile.
You check the airline prices? I quit flying years and years ago, but last I saw were one way trips from here to Philly, NJ, JFK, (I think Allentown was also included) and Harrisburg were 79 bucks...granted that was last month, but still way cheaper than driving. Dunno if those reflect the prices from there to here and then back, though.

A letter of warning is not a "bust". The Feds have sent out thousands of these over the years. So what?

(Sigh) What does that have to do with anything? Sure,not a problem. As usual, you select, cut and snip and present only part of a thread, out of it's original context. When removing a post from it's original context it's meaning will almost always be changed, which appears to be your MO, otherwise, why would you take this post and apply it to N8? Let us proceed further...that post was in response to the one below,,,by a hammie who received a letter that he was "busted"...HIS words.

    I was only chatting briefly a few times a day with my XYL.

Ok,,now you see the post to which I originally responded and which you reposted here deliberately out of context and tried to apply it to a a thread 3 years later. The question is.....why such desperation?
Nevertheless, it sheds a little light on things. Allow us to go a little further.....go back to the beginning of the thread you callously took this post from, and you have yet another hammie using the term
"busted" and applying it to cbers getting busted for....being mentioned on the Rainreport. So,as it seems, you are not only in the minority of cbers views, but of hammies views as well. Just as N3CVJ said he saw the light and claims he no longer freebands, I too, saw the light as what constitutes a bust. I now consider a letter from the FCC and/or a mention on the rainreport as being in violation as a "bust", Hey, I'm outnumbered,,those hammies had it happen to them so if they say its a bust, I am certain they know more about the scenario than you or I......no? Hey, cool.... I'm convinced.....a mention on the rainreport of violations constitutes a bust, a breach of agreement of the rules.

And the report STILL claims Adair committed violations on the repeater. As the repeater owner, the club is taking the brunt of Adair's boorish and illegal behavior...it's not entirely fair, but the club should have been in absolute control at all times of the transmissions. The CLUB received a warning letter and have responded to Riley. The CLUB took the black eye because of his criminal nature.
A clear case of the slug N8 being busted and not taking responsibility for his actions. I sent Riley a couple of threats from N8 that were mailed to me as well as some of the more colorful ones he posted. Guess what? I wasn't the only one that expressed sentiments concerning N8. PeP type of wattage measurement is used mostly for a modulated wave. Pep wattage is a wattage measurement for a brief period of time.The time period chosen is at the top of a modulation peak. For example just take the rms value of one RF cycle at this peak and then square it. Then just divide by 50 ohms. OR.....Vsquared/R = W

A standard 4 watt carrier can also be measured as pep wattage.
Since there are no modulation peaks all the RF cycles are the same amplitude. When this happens 4 watts average equals 4 watts pep.

Upon 100% mod the modulated amplitude doubles the original carriers amplitude. A doubling of this voltage represents a quadrupling of the power. Or a 100% modulated 4 watt carrier will now measure 16 watts PEP

Freebanders, I hate to legitimize them with that term, are the viruses of ham radio. Thinking that laws are jokes and rules are for any operator but them, they not only populate the 27 MHz no-man's land; they're everywhere. You can easily find them encroaching on 10 meters and 12 meters everyday. They also are on 15 meters, 30 meters and 80 meters.
I knew about the recent FK/C operation where Freeband was defended by the local FK sponsor as being legal. Assuming that it is legal in New Caledonia it certainly is not legal in the United States. Even when engaging in a legal activity in one's own country I am sure if it generates or supports an illegal activity in another country, it's illegal under a host of international regulations. The ARRL recognizes this in its DXCC rules.

Several sections make it clear that contacts with unlicensed or undocumented operators will not count for DXCC credit.

Freebanders have no concern for either domestic or international regulations.

Whether Freebanders are an out-growth of outlaw CB or vice versa I don't know. Regardless, they each now feed off of each other creating a lawless spiral that seems impossible to control. Not only that, they foster other totally illegal operations. Domestic taxis, fishing boats and barges, and shoestring business operations regularly take place on 2 meters and 440 MHz.

Sometimes they get run off by the hams and sometimes they don't. When they do get run off they find other frequencies to squat on. Last year there were a couple of fishermen in the New England area regularly camped out in the 80 meter CW band in the mornings.

This all becomes even more complicated because HF radio frequencies are global in nature. Only atmospheric ionization controls where signals ultimately go. In Latin America, for example, CB channel 40 is 28.035 MHz. I don't know if this is legal or not because I don't know all the Latin American radio regulations. What I do know is that people in Mexico can walk into a radio store and buy a CB radio that transmits on channel 40, 28.035 MHz, right out of the box. Then we hear them all day and night when conditions are good.

No DX'er has not heard Indonesian taxis or Japanese fishing trawlers all over the ham bands. This encroachment may be legal in those countries or areas and that just makes everything more difficult.

However, Freebanding, which fundamentally promotes contacts between operators of different countries is not legal in the United States.

Therefore, any operation that contacts United States citizens is also illegal. Now for what might be done. First; write, call, email and bug to death your league representatives. Make them do what Mike suggests, refuse to accept for DXCC credit any DX-pedition, operation, or individual operator that supports any form of Freeband operation. Not only that, if you are members of NCDXF or INDXA or any other financial support agency, make it clear you will not support them if they provide any support to any DX operation that involves Freebanding. I, for one, will be undertaking an extended campaign to get the ARRL to come out publicly opposed to accrediting any operation involving Freebanders.

Of a side interest to me is the Freebander's web site use of DXCC and IOTA nomenclature in their award structure. Thinking there might be a copy right infringement here, the legal counsels of both agencies should be made aware of this use of their respective logos and designators. One last item that I am sure will stir the controversy pot. If it were up to me, I would prohibit amateur radio dealers from selling ham radio equipment to unlicensed purchasers. I know this idea has a quagmire of problems and I don't know yet how to make it work. You don't have to have a license to buy a car, or an airplane, or a gun. Only gun purchases require a minimum age. Perhaps some sort of "Ethics in Sales" code administered by the ARRL could work. They do supposedly have an advertising ethics code.

You might think that sales of ham equipment to Freebanders or CB'ers is a minor problem. Trust me it is not.

My best guess is that at least one-third, and perhaps one half of all major retailers' gross sales are to unlicensed domestic buyers. I have no way to address the exported equipment but there is plenty of that going on too.

Thanks a lot Mike for touching on the one, the only really pet peeve I have regarding ham radio at this time. CB is the single worse thing that ever happened to amateur radio, ever!

I bought a Motorola AMPLIFIED speaker last week from a fellow who buys these (used - taken from police vehicles), gives them a once over and sells them on eBay. Liked the speaker VERY much. I've tried it with an Icom IC-706MKIIG and BC780XLT scanner. It worked sooo well, and you can get soooo much volume, I decided to buy another. Thought you might want to check it out:

http://cgi.ebay.com/ws/eBayISAPI.dll?ViewItem&item=3008526090

There are less expensive ones available but I decided to go with Barry's. He cleans them up and provides a wiring schematic showing you how to wire them for our hobby use (these speakers have 6 or 7 wires on the cord so you NEED the schematic).

Thought I'd pass along some inf. for those interested. BTW: he has a bunch of these and puts them up periodically. Right now I only see one but there should be more.

And the report STILL claims Adair committed violations on the repeater.
As the repeater owner, the club is taking the brunt of Adair's boorish and illegal behavior...it's not entirely fair, but the club should have been in absolute control at all times of the transmissions. The CLUB received a warning letter and have responded to Riley. The CLUB took the black eye because of his criminal nature.
A clear case of the slug N8 being busted and not taking responsibility for his actions. I sent Riley a couple of threats from N8 that were mailed to me as well as some of the more colorful ones he posted. Guess what? I wasn't the only one that expressed sentiments concerning N8.
Riley was given a list of calls and urged to do some casual reading in his spare time of this group to see exactly what has been perpetuated and by who...all I can sayis this......it was all behavior unbecoming of hammieS, as in plural..multiple. The chickenhawk N8 better never even

Yes, i think that those frequencies are common to norway, but is it only 10mW ?

I belive mentioned in RR from ITU that "other users" must accept harmful interference
from ISM-applications ?
And 10mW, hehe, is not so much....

My point is that there ARE shorter antennas that CAN slightly

The ones who have the most to loose are the Freebanding Pirate operators, and amps users, on this group. So by all means Twisted have Riley do some reading on this news group. I'll guarantee he'll be so disgusted by the actions of the illegal CB crowd he'll have nothing but sympathy for the Hams pushing for cleaning up the 11m mess. The very thing you claim will not happen, Part 95 enforcement by the FCC, may well be precipated by your very own actions. All I can say is WELL DONE TWISTED!!!

Once again, there is no enforcement for the average cber that is merely talking DX or dxing on certain freeband channels. Would the FCC "like" there to be? Ask them. No funds for chasing what is considered a non-problem is YOUR problem. You know how it goes, unless attention is

I have nothing to do with what riley may choose or not choose to do, over 2 years ago. How do I know? Dogie CC'ed it to me. Funny what goes Actually, just the opposit is true. Riley has claimed that viligante-type hammies are often worse than the problem itself. Email him and ask him if he didn't issue that exact quote. We will all be

Yes, if by that you mean that it has less harmonics than a "no bias" amp...
absolutely correct.
But just keep in mind that the "brute force" method that Texas Star amps employ as bias, is really a design cost compromise...

The problem with these speakers is that they linearly amplify the noise as well as the audio. On H.F. these speakers are NG.

As I was tuning around below the CB band, I happened across a relatively busy frequency. It seemed to be an "island unto itself", in that neighboring frequencies were mostly quiet with only an occasional carrier here and there. 26.375 MHz sounded much like our (U.S.) channel 19 - many, many carriers, most sounding like low power transmitters. The operators were speaking Spanish, but I couldn't make much out of their conversations. Does anybody know where these stations are? Mexico, perhaps? And is this some sort of channel 19-type affair with many mobile stations communicating with each other? And why this frequency? Is this a common channel on the export radios? Thanks for any info.

Absolutely, the higher the better. If you dont believe it try working CB from an airplane some times or even off the top of a mountain. 100 miles anytime barefoot, 3ft antenna.

Gentlefolk, (the rest of you know who you are)

I have a question about big-rig diesel trucks. I've noticed that many put a covering over the radiator to block airflow. I assume that this is to make the engine run hotter. I know that diesel engines run best at a particular temperature range. BUT why is it necessary to block the airflow? Don't the engines have a thermostat to keep the water in the engine at a particular temperature?

That is a general hangout for all of Latin America. It has been that way for years.

Blocking part of my radiator makes it heat up quicker and more in the operating range. If you don't heat your oil enough, engine condensation creates bad sludge in your oil. This moisture must be evaporated.

Does anyone have a fix for the annoying DC pop when the squelch breaks on a Lafayette SSB-140.
Seems the speaker get hit with a DC pulse when the squelch opens (both on SSB or AM) Great radio but this drives me nuts at night !

Yes. It replaces the green ABS-1600. The ground plane kits for these antennas are a waste of money and nothing more than marketing.

The Antron 99 is a pile (but works). The IMAX 2000 is built pretty well...

I'd buy the NBS-2010 (Big Stick) first; then the IMAX 2000. I wouldn't buy the Antron 99 (again). If you want a ground plane kit, I'd recommend looking at a better antenna first...like a Maco V58!

And the report STILL claims Adair committed violations on the repeater.
As the repeater owner, the club is taking the brunt of Adair's boorish
and illegal behavior...it's not entirely fair, but the club should have been in absolute control at all times of the transmissions. The CLUB received a warning letter and have responded to Riley. The CLUB took the black eye because of his criminal nature.
A clear case of the slug N8 being busted and not taking responsibility for his actions. I sent Riley a couple of threats from N8 that were mailed to me as well as some of the more colorful ones he posted. Guess what? I wasn't the only one that expressed sentiments concerning N8.
Riley was given a list of calls and urged to do some casual reading in his spare time of this group to see exactly what has been perpetuated
and by who...all I can sayis this......it was all behavior unbecoming of hammieS, as in plural..multiple. The chickenhawk N8 better never even

Not at all, America did not win the WW2, the allies did, the allies were already turning the tide before you came along !! Maybe you should check your facts, it is a known fact that WW2 would have been over much quicker had the US not been supplying the Nazi's with weapons !! Sounds familiar isn't it, you do know that the reason the UK and US knows about Iraq's potential WMD is because there are invoices to prove that US and UK companies sold them the parts !!

America were part of an allied force that included Russia, who actually supplied far more fighting men than the US, so maybe we would be closer saying that Russia won the war as by far the most number of Russians died in the conflict !!

Just because you buy into America's revisionist history doesn't mean it was right, the US got involved in WW2 as an act of revenge, lets be honest, the same reason that they went and massacred innocent Afghanistan people, as did the UK !! You hardly did anything to the Al Queada but you bombed innocent villages !!

I know the US paid a big part in WW2, but they did not win it, they were part of a group, and they didn't even contribute the most,

In World War 2, from 1941 until 1946, there were 11,260,000 in the U.S. Army. Killed in action battle deaths for the U.S. Army are reported as 405,500.

During the same time there were 20 million Russians (soldiers and civilians) killed, please don't come on as the saviours you were one of many !!

Here's an interesting quote:

"In the war a total of 17 million soldiers lost their lives. Whole cities were destructed and lay in ruins. The dropping of the atomic bombs on Hiroshima and Nagasaki ushered in the nuclear age. It opened up the whole New World of nuclear warfare and other newer and better weapons to wage war as was seen during the Cold War that followed. A number of peace treaties were drawn up after the war and these affect the affairs of nations even today. One of the greatest outcomes of the war was the power shift. Great Britain had been the most powerful and wealthiest nation in the world for over a hundred years. But all that changed. Its resources were all used up and status decreased. It wasn't just Britain that suffered. People all over the world did. Hundreds of thousands of people laid down their lives for the sake of their countries. But the truth is, no one really gained anything much. In fact most countries (excluding the US) lost a lot. Britain lost the power it once had, France lost lives and also land, Japan lost hundreds of thousands of civilians and Germany lost everything. In Japan, hundreds of thousands of people are still affected by the atomic bomb. The whole world fought for five years and spent more than 50 billion dollars. What is it that we gained from it ? The peace that we have today and have had for the past 50 years, some would say. But the question is ï¿½ was it worth it ? The World War II is over but its consequences have to be faced."

How can one be "right wing" and "Anti-gun"? No, Bob has espoused his views on many topics. He's as left wing as it gets. He reads such tripe as "the Economist" to feed him his opinions.

Which is what makes him a liberal, leftist. Right wingers make statements like "Prying my gun from my cold dead fingers...." And being

Jay,

Understood. I'm sure you know, as I do, that in a free market, something is ultimately worth, what others are willing to pay for it. If your antennas sell well at the price you charge, then they must be worth it....

You're a brave sole, and your dog is smarter. You wouldn't catch me in a Denny's on a bet. The absolute worst food. what did it in for me was staying in San Jose, and having to eat there for a few days. Never again!

I think what Jay is refering too is the problem with the common (Thanks to the FCC) fiberglass halfwave "stick" antennas, which have poor decoupling, and an angle of radiation that puts a significant proportion of their radiated signal (near field) into neighboring buildings, and consumer electronics. His (and most other ground plane) antennas have a better impedence matcher which provides for better decoupling, and lessens the chances of feedline radiation. The near field radiation is also not directed toward the neighborhood in as much of a concentration. The end result is that Jay's antenna will contribute to RFI less than say, and A99.

Good point. Any 5/8 wave or even a 1/4 or 1/2 wave ground plane style antenna, with radials should perform better than a "stick" antenna with regards to RFI.

True enough. But why are you beating up Jay? I'm glad that there are guys like him, who are willing to make the effort to produce a better product, then what is currently available.

I remember, back in the early to mid 70's, there was another guy, like Jay, rolling his own antennas in this area. They were called "Starburst" and "Super-Starburst". They were 5/8th waves with 5 (Starburst) or 10 (Super Starburst). 1/8th wave radials. The guys who ran them, claimed that they were better than the commercially produced antennas. Supposedly the guy who made them, died, and the antennas stopped being made. Once in a while I still see one on a roof, tarnished and a bit bent after all these years. I'm half tempted to see if they'll let me take it down for them.....

I wish more people would try to make a better wheel. Why settle for something, when there is room for improvement? Even if Jay's antenna were no better than the Penetrator 500, that's still head and shoulders above what we have now.

I wouldn't know for sure. I was merely speculating in response to Nebo's implication that some sort of deal was worked out (despite the homosexual spin he put on it). It's been my experience, that if a case against someone is "dropped", it either means that they lack sufficient evidence to proceed further, or that they found a better suspect.

I'm really disappointed that you choose to buy into this propaganda so easily. You sound like the French, who, without our help 60 years ago, would be speaking German right now.

I suppose that Saddam is really a nice guy? He didn't really use chemical weapons against his own people did he? And he didn't really use the money earned from the oil for food program, to build more palaces and bunkers instead of taking care of the needs of his people. And I'm sure that he wouldn't be the type to threaten to kill the families of any worker found to have leaked any information to the UN weapon's inspectors?

War is not a pretty thing, it never is. But sometimes it's necessary. Had we listened to the hopelessly naive and clueless protesters during the second world war, just how far would Hitler have gone? Should we stand idly by and allow a man with a proven record for brutality, to continue to amass the implements of his brutality? He's already tried to take over one country (And we pounded him back), where would he be now, if we hadn't interviened then? Saddam has made a mockery of the U.N, by consistently ignoring the conditions and resolutions that were a part of the cease fire agreement that ended the Gulf War. He has violated that treaty, so by the conditions in the treaty we should've been over there kicking his ass again long before now. The U.N comes off as a body of paper tigers, with no power, while the U.S. is looked upon as "war mongers" for basically trying to do, what the U.N. can't find the guts to do.

For the record, our military strikes are one of the most precise in the world. Our weapons are accurate, and the amount of civilian casualties are as low as can be, under the circumstances. We don't look to take out innocent people. Contrast this to Saddam's compassion for his own people by attempting to use then as human shields, to park military vehicles in schools, mosques, hospitals etc. Saddam has been responsible for the deaths of more Iraqi citizens, directly or indirectly, than the rest of the coalition combined.

Saddam has ties to terrorist groups. There is also evidence that Iraq was tied to the Oklahoma City bombing as well. He is truly a man that needs to be removed from power, or the future stability of the region is in danger.

There is also the psychological factor. How would it look to places like North Korea, if we could be made to back down? If we aren't willing to stamp out aggressors, then more of them will pop up. We have to make the statement that we're serious about routing out terrorists and the countries that fund and support them.

Of course most of this escapes the typically myopic and clueless anti-war protestor, who's usual line of reasoning is restricted to such simplistic concepts such as "It's about the oil", or equally absurd accusations about imperialism. When was the last time the United States claimed a piece of territory? Heck, even Puerto Rico, has a problem with becoming a full fledged state, and you don't see us putting troops down there to "change their minds". We simply don't do things like that.

Yes, we have made some foreign policy decisions, that have come back to haunt us. But like they say, hindsight is 20-20. How could we have known that Saddam would turn into the tyrant that he is today? Or Bin Laden, freedom fighter turned terrorist?

Good speakers, what do you want, a class c amp.
The only mod I have done to speakers like that was to add a circuit that would cut off the power to the amp after a 30 second quiet time.

I think what he's trying to say is that a 1/4 wave whip is far better than any loaded antenna. As for a 9' long 1" dia. silver plated rod, that would be a bit unwieldy to use while mobile.

What are Cbers doing in a Ham NG, perhaps if Riley catches wind of this perhaps he will monitor that NG. I guess i'll have to write him...

He can monitor me all he wants to in this NG, Why should I be afraid of Riley, I am a law abiding citizen, more than I can say for many in this NG. In fact I am going to beg him to read this NG, He will see guys like Dickhead trolling about claiming they have a ham license... He will see guys like twisyehed claiming how he freebands and uses amps, he will see Nebo on 27.570 on SSTV.. Sure send old Riley to this NG, I don't have a care in the world when it comes to Riley. To bad the keyclowns can't say the same .

Good post Dave. I have a couple of things to add...

First, the addition of of more than 4 ground radials is almost useless. I will dig out the text for this if you wish. While there was an increase in performance from going from 3 to 4, anything past 4 only added weight and did little for the signal quality.

Also, Jay tested his antenna agains MANY different antennas. I even supplied him with an original Avanti Sigma 5/8 wave. While a 5/8 radiator is still a 5/8 radiator, the magic is in the feedpoint! Jay's feedpoint, by design, has less capacitance which equates to more signal getting to this 5/8 radiator. Also, the 5/8 radiator is ELEVATED which has been tested time and time again by many antenna builders and proven to increase efficiency! You will hear terms like "elevated feed". Jay is a big fan of the Penetrator! His initial designs for the Mastadon 5000 was nothing more than a Penetrator with an improved feedpoint. Test proved that the Penetrator and the Mastadon antennas suffered in efficency based on the Penetrators initial design. After experimenting, the Interceptor 10K was born and doesn't resemble a Penetrator other than being metal and an antenna. In other words, its no more a Penetrator than it is a Sigma 5/8 or a Maco V58.

This is true antenna designing and testing at its best!

I own an Interceptor 10K, 3 Sigma 5/8, a Sigma IV, an Antron 99 (yuck!), and a couple other misc antennas. Having used these antennas and testing a couple right against the Interceptor, I can tell you that the Interceptor out performs them all!

This antenna is not for everyone! But I will say that you get what you pay for! It was money well spent for me and 6 other guys in the neighborhood!

After we get past all the "improved feedpoint" stuff, I will also add that it is mechanically the best antenna I've owned! The original Sigma (5/8 and IV) and the Penetrator antennas were good. The current crop of antennas coming from Italy and elsewhere are HORRIBLE!!! Thin metal and weak construction! For that matter, the Maco 5/8 has this stupid ring that mates the ground radials to the main base element. I've seen many Maco antennas that fail right there! This is why I suggest TIG welding the first section of the ground radial to this ring. Sure it makes the antenna a little more to deal with on the ground, but once it's up, you will thank me! There are other upgrades to the Maco V58, but I'll save that for another discussion later.

73 Dave! I loved the post and you rcontribution to the list...even if we don't always agree ;-)

I wouldn't know for sure. I was merely speculating in response to Nebo's implication that some sort of deal was worked out (despite the homosexual spin he put on it). It's been my experience, that if a case against someone is "dropped", it either means that they lack sufficient evidence to proceed further, or that they found a better suspect.

The "case" which you refer, wasn't dropped. The Toledo amateur club took the hit for N8WWM's criminal nature in the form of a warning letter and reprimand...standard issue by the FCC when a violation is committed by an amateur. The warning letter was not dropped nor rescinded..the feds issued it and meant every word of it.

This isn't directed directly at George...but to everyone. George just stimulated my thinking on this...

If you haven't actually used or help build/assemble/erect a particular antenna, you don't have the ability to speak intellegently about it. You should state that you have no experience before saying one design is better or worse than another.

George said, "...it looks very durable." This tells me he has no experience with this antenna. If he had, he whould KNOW it is more durable!

When I talk about antennas, I speak from personal experience! I've built many antennas...both commercial made and homebrew. I read like crazy too! I am not the last word on antennas, but I know much more than many on this list! (If we were talking about amplifiers, I'd be at the bottom of the food chain...I don't know amplifier design other than what I've heard from those who do and those I trust.)

This goes for amplifiers, radios, mics, coax, etc...

As far as Jay "stretching his claims", if you actually knew him, you would know that this is NOT something that Jay does. If that was the case, Jay would claim his antennas as having a gain figure HIGHER than the Penetrator and the Sigma 5/8 due to it's higher FIELD STRENGTH numbers. Jay doesn't! He claims his antenna as having a gain figure of 3.x per its design as a 5/8 antenna.

This makes me think that there should be additional specs issued to antennas. Speakers use the "x DB at 1 watt @ 1 meter". Maybe we should see "x Field Strength @ 1000'", or somthing like it...just a thought.

>Actually I like Jay he is a bitchen dood but some of his claims seemed a

Yeah thats some funny shit watching moped, troll around on rec.radio.policy, Randy ask him if he has a ham license and why is he there?

A theoretical full size whip is better than a theoretical loaded whip.

The problem is that we don't live in a theoretical world. In the real world by far the most common full size whip is the 9' Stainless Steel whip. This SS whip can be beat by some shorter loaded antennas.

Ok, Dino Let's see what your comments about Jays antennas bring from some guys who are not on this list who are in fact antenna guru's.

Dino claimed:

You must be kidding, Churchill was overjoyed that the Japanese bombed Pearl Harbor as it finally brought the U.S. into the war and he knew the U.S. would save Britain's butt, which we did. If the U.S. had not been pulled into the war you would be a German today instead of a Brit. Likewise with the ungrateful French.

I would be most greatful if you would take a look and perhaps enter your details.

Why do you assume he lies? Everyone lies sometime in their life. You need to be a bit more realistic about our government officials. Life is not one huge conspiracy. Remember that millions of people protested our involvement in WW2 and we all know how wise our decision to enter that war is now. I for one am glad the uninformed or mislead do not make foreign policy decisions.

For the record, I am not a "member" of any group, organization, or other loosely knit conglomerate, which lays claim to that acronym.

I share many of the ideals of some of the other people mentioned, but have no knowlege that there ever was any sort of group who conducted any sort of "Hanky Panky". You make it sound like a conspriracy.

Fair enough. You need to tell that to Mr. Nebo, since he was the one who Aaron is Dwight S. Frank G. is pouting because his friend Dwight is moving out of the country.

You are George WA3MOJ. You are the one who has been duped.

Now, go away georgie... you bother me...

How could that be? Russia wasn't Russia during world war 2, it was the U.S.S.R. Is that how you measure the winner, who lost the most lives? Wouldn't that the make Axis powers the winner then?

Actually, the US entered the war to save your ass. They let the Japanese, even ecouraged them to attack Pearl Harbor to have enough public sentiment to be able to enter the war. The U.S at that time was neutral, and the public wanted nothing to do with fighting your war.

The real truth is, if the U.S. hadn't come to your aid with supplies at first and then armed forces, and that Hitler hadn't made a big blunder and turned his attention to the Soviet Union, he would have thrown all of his forces against the U.K. And sad to say you would have eventually lost out.

No, the U.S. did not win the war single handed, but if we hadn't entered the war the outcome would have been quite a bit different for the U.K.

The "case" which you refer, wasn't dropped. The Toledo amateur club took the hit for N8WWM's criminal nature in the form of a warning letter and reprimand...standard issue by the FCC when a violation is committed by an amateur. The warning letter was not dropped nor rescinded..the feds issued it and meant every word of it.

Fair enough. You need to tell that to Mr. Nebo, since he was the one who first mentioned that this case was somehow "over".

"Sandbagger"

Dave,
If the Feds accepted the response from the amateur club that received the letter and an agreement was met, then that would more than likely be the end of it. For now, until his next violation...as a reflection of society, his behavior on usenet has not changed, so it is safe to assume his behavior on the air will not change. We will be hearing more of Adair.

Riley is reading this NG... Hey Riley How is it going my man.. :wink wink: I got a collection of websites you may want to take a look, whilest your browsing the web, ps: you may want to thank twisty he let me know you were coming to the group so i got this info ready, it is a collection of dealers and maker of amps that are ruining the CB band and also impeding on the amateur bands. If your serious about your job you will start worrying about amateur bands and the CB band instead of reading this NG. Oh btw, the guy twistedhed is an admitted violator of the amplifer rule and violates the current CB frequency allocation he regularly appears on the so called "freeband" admittedly so and tape recorder by members of our audiance. Now I know this won't make me popular with the boys in CB but the work of a Radio Super Hero is not a easy task. I have some more names in a seperate dossier
I will be emailing them to you.

Dave,
If the Feds accepted the response from the amateur club that received the letter and an agreement was met, then that would more than likely be the end of it. For now, until his next violation...as a reflection of society, his behavior on usenet has not changed, so it is safe to assume his behavior on the air will not change. We will be hearing more of Adair.

Oh spare me, what he does or anyone does on the radio doesn't refelct how they are in on this NG . They are likely to be the same but there is not guarantee, either way. I am an asshole on the NG to the rest of the assholes on here. Yet to converse with me on the air is another thing. Just because you say it doesn't make it so.

I use my transciever's at times to listen via a 10 meter vertical. Usually it is to find a SSBer on the freeband running an amp to talk to his buddy 20

Yes they do have a thermostat, but all the thermostat can do is close to attempt to raise the coolant temperature to the thermostat's setpoint. If the radaitor gets too much cold air flowing through it, the thermostat may not ever reach it's setpoint, despite it being closed.

Rich,

I got the 4 Shottky diodes for my receive, but they crossreferenced NTE583 instead ECG583. Dealer said that NTE bought out ECG products. The package says Schottky, fast switching diode for UHF/VHF detection. Doesn't mention anything about being the barrier diode. Is this the same thing?

Get someone from South America or some worldly experience to listen to them. You can often tell where they are by the local language inflection. Each version of Spanish is unique to the area where it's common.

When visiting family down in Southern Mexico, I took a taxi home one night to see the driver using CB channel 28 and a stock radio. They use them down there like we do up here. I asked him if he could hear the US on his radio, he said yes in the background and once in a while he could talk back up here from a local mountain top (had no linear).

Cheers

And I'm really disappointed that you choose to buy into the government propoganda that would suggest that Bush and Cheney wear the "white hats" and are above reproach. Where was Dick Cheney during VietNam, when he could have served his country? He requested and received FIVE student deferments, saying he "had better things to do than" serve in the military. And "W" only served in the Texas Air Nationsl Guard, NEVER outside the Texas state borders. A couple of unqualified cowards are now ready to send America's youth into an unnecessary war that's all about oil.

Maybe, maybe not. Can you prove it?

No, it isn't. Iraq hasn't threatened us and certainly hasn't attacked us. Personally, I consider North Korea more of a threat, yet we want to pursue diplomatic means to a solution. OTOH, Bush wanted to attack Iraq without any UN inspections. Gotta make you wonder, don't it?

He did it with the duplicity of our (female!) ambassador, who looked

IOW, she LIED to him to create the "situation".

Bullcrap. The Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor was far more precise than any of our strikes, and they didn't have the so-called "smart weapons".

Our weapons are accurate,

Only about 70% accurate during the first attack on Iraq. But we excuse any mistakes as "collateral damage". So it doesn't count. Horse

Oh really? Who are you to make such statements? We committed an international crime invading Panama. We committed an international crime mining the harbors of Nicaragua. We committed an international crime bombing Lybia. We DO do things like that.

> Yes, we have made some foreign policy decisions, that have come back to

It doesn't take much intelligence to figure that one out. And the CIA doesn't have much intelligence. Obviously. EVERY time we meddle in the internal affairs of a foreign nation it backfires. We meddle for OUR OWN benefit, not the benefit of the people of the country involved.
There's a reason we get kicked in the teeth, Dave. We were kicked out of VietNam by a bunch of "gooks in black PJs and Ho Chi Minh sandals" because we were there only to protect the rubber company's investments in the plantations. We were kicked out of Somilia by a disorganized bunch of "ragheads" because we were only there to establish a "central government" (with no regard to what those People wanted) which would control the country so the Oil companies would proceed with offshore drilling. What's so hard to understand?

One man's "terrorist" is another man's "freedom fighter", Dave. THINK about it.

And YOU do? Don't make me laugh! You know what the controlled media feeds you, and they feed you what the Bush regime wants you to know.

Mind you, it might have worked better if you had explained Saddam's intentions toward the non-Arab world and given your sources of information instead of making such a dumb broad statement, JJ.

point of the big bux was because of not having a contract. the transatlantic cable system is brand new so these 'housekeeping' contracts are still being let. besides whoda thunk of this much snow???

Either way with a lot that size it is cheaper to have your own truck, beside the fact of conveyance you can plow the whole lot.
a used 4 wheel drive pick up, and plow $2,000 to 5,000 depending on how old. That is what many have already spent on snow removal this past storm.
Let alone the season. Plus it is a write off.

Well, don't really know what to say, George. In kind, I'm sure you really aren't the troll you appear to be here. I'm the kind of person that can't really hate someone unless you do something to me personally. Words are nothing. We've agreed to disagree, and that's the way things should be conducted between adults. Sure, you've looked for info on me, and vice versa, but then again, who really gives a shit? I don't. This group is entertainment to me. It's not my life. Some folks here take this shit entirely too seriously, and that's sad, IMHO. I have my job, my kiddos, and a bitchen girlfriend who is more than my ex-wife could ever dream to be. And to beat all, the ex and I now get along. In my opinion, I'm doing OK.

On the subject of Twist, I've had my probs with him too, but hopefully we have that resolved. He has his agenda and opinions, and they are not mine.

Yes it would. A 1" diameter rod at 9' would be too long for the CB band and have a horrible SWR! :-)

hehehe

good one Tom! But REALLY, these AMPLIFIED speakers are nice! I've got one apart right now and installing my own red and black zip cord (7'). For the money, I just cannot say enough good. In fact last night I was on a radio amateur 'rag chew / traders net'. I mentioned the speakers there too. They are GREAT for HAM operators who do public service work in shelters. I've been in shelters (this is Florida - HURRICANE threats send people into shelters) and they can be quite noisy. They can be helpful at EOC radio rooms as well ... if you want VOLUME for what you're listening to this speaker will do it.

For you skeptics, check out the feedback from buyers of Barry's speakers. The feedback speaks for itself!

In my opinion, NO. The antennas listed were not designed to have ground plane kits. I would suspect interference with the de-coupling sleeves.

The engineers at Shakespear are not sluffs...if this would help the performance of their antennas, they would use them.

I will agree that a ground plane kit "could" help with near field TVI problems...but will hurt the performance of the antenna.

No, I can't back this up with any fancy web sites. This just comes from experience and listing to those who came before me.

Very True Randy, but when the BS starts to flow with the foul language, and assorted bs, you just have to wonder. How one moment, swear, accuse make up what ever bs comes to mind, then the next moment "I'm your best friend?"
As for the group, well as a whole I don't have a problem with most, you've seen that, but the constant trolling, getting their jollies from just being a troll, it's just getting old.
OH well, have a good one, stay warm........

This isn't your thread. You have not added to anything I've said. You have tried to discredit me and failed. If you want to read my rebuttal to your childish post, you will have to go over to the other news group.

You are baffled all on your own. You appear to dislike CB yet you hang out here. You hide behind ever changing nick names and haven't contributed one bit.

Watch and learn. Become part of the solution and not the problem. It is because of people like you that ham radio and this newsgroup gets a bad name.

You do not know, what I know. You can't prove or disprove any of my assertions and run to other groups to satisfy your desire to stir the pot. Do YOU have any comments about antenna therory? Would YOU like to participate?

You are an embarrassment to ham radio...I hope you are proud.

Subject: [cbtricks] RM Amp Question

Hi All!

I'm putting togather a little rig and decided to use an amp (Just to get over the skip, you understand. LOL!) I bought a RM KL200P from someone on EBay. He promised that the instructions to convert it from 10 meters, would come with it or be avaible on his web site. As it turns out, neither is true. So here I sit with a new amp, that I can't use. Does anybody have an idea of the mod it takes to make this work? It's supposed to a very easy one.

Thanks, Talk at you soon!

You're right, but Russia is the generic name for the USSR, and no, the USSR lots almost 3 times as may people as the amis, who only lost 7 million !!

HAHAHAHA That is true, but the majority of people don't want the US to get involved in a war with Iraq, yet you're willing to do first strike, so you won't help you allies when millions are getting killed and yet you are willing to go against opinion to remove a tinpot

I agree that the supplies were a huge help to us in our war effort, and we appreciate that, but is does not mean we wouldn't have won !! I don't have a problem with saying the US were a big part of the allied victory, but you did not win the war for us and youdid not save all of Europe !!

Not at all, the point I'm trying to nake is that USSR and UK were allies, as we helped them when the Germans attacked them so they would have helped us, the USSR was by far the biggest force in WW2 and had the capability to destroy the other powers.

Your lack of actual knowledge on theis subject is quite impressive, I find it very insulting to all the allies who died fighting a real menace, for freedom when you state that America single handedly saved everyone, you didn't you played a big part in an operation that had started 2 years before you came along and might have finished earler had the Nazi's not been being funded by George W Bush's grandfather and the like from US shores !!

There's a BIG difference between sharing some of the principles that others stand behind, and being a "member" of some underground cyber terrorist group.

I was never "claimed" by anyone, other than being lumped in as agreeing in principle with the rule of law.

I remember that well. Obviously, you misread it as some sort of vow of unity and an affirmation that the "akc collective" (Resistance is futile!) will continue to function even if one "member" leaves. What I, and hopefully others less drawn to conspiracy theories, took that to mean, was that there are other people standing up for the rule of law, who will continue the debate, even if Aaron were to leave. The people that Aaron names there were all people who have voiced opinions that operating outside the rules set forth in part 95, were breaking federal law, and subject to prosecution, if caught.

> >You make it sound like a conspriracy.

But you have always been the one to assign cute little names like "the dog pound", to describe those of us who share common principles, and have treated this as some sort of "group attack", rather than what it really was, which was several individual people sharing a common set of moral principles. It's true that some chose the wrong way to express them. But I am no more responsible for that, then you are.

> They claimed you as their own and you never took issue > with the fact or denied it or separated yourself from it.

Because, I didn't see it as you do. I don't have an issue being identified as having similar interests, goals, or principles, with others. That doesn't make it a conspiracy, or anything else even remotely sinister.

It's not my problem. I never thought there was an organized "group" or a conspiracy. You are the one who keeps lumping the people together, as if it were.

>From what I've read on the subject, I would agree with you. The only exception to that would be ground mounted HF antennas, where they recommend as many radials as possible, (Even a chicken wire mesh if practical), for best RF ground. Once the antenna is elevated and the radials become the artificial counterpoise, the amount of radials seems to be optimal at 4.

In the example, that I gave from the 70's, I guess it may have been more hype than anything else. These "starburst" antennas, did seem to work well, and they looked kind of neat with the double row of 5 radials each. Those who owned them, claimed that they worked better than what they had before (Which was usually a 1/2 wave GP), but nobody did any real objective testing back in those days. I was way too young and had little experience and no test equipment back then.

It's a shame that I'm not in a position to put up anything large anymore, or I'd buy one just to play with. My last antenna, at my old house, was a Sigma 4, and at that time, that was the best omni, I ever had. It bested my original 1/2 wave, an Astro plane, and a hustler 5/8th. I'd love to compare that with an I-10K, although my tried and true friends, who helped me do my signal comparisons over the years, have long since left the band, so I'd have to find a whole new set of references....

Nobody agrees with another 100% of the time.
The trick is being able to disagree, without becoming disagreeable. ;)

The ECG583 and NTE583 are essentially the same diodes. Results vary from radio to radio; in some the difference is quite noticable, in others it's marginal. For mobile use, replacing the noise blanker diodes should show a big improvement. I've done the replacement on radios that were kept in the shack, since I didn't have a mobile rig at the time.

Use a very fine tip soldering iron and a clamp-on heatsink; those diodes are pretty darned sensitive. And watch the polarity!

FYI, the mod was written up in QST years ago with specific reference to the Uniden HR2510 and similar rigs. So if anyone (Georgie-girl) has questions they can look it up for themselves (if they know how to read, of course).

So who gives a "rat's ass" about YOUR ranting, either, JJ. Typically, you didn't bother to address the point. Which amply demonstrates your level of knowledge.

As to the 10 meterband, maybe you could operate there instead of sniping in a CB newsgroup like a child? Naw, I didn't think so.

Hey Stuart, if you guys were doing such an admirable job defending yourselves, why was Germany able to bomb London with V2's, and even winged bombers? Not to mention the huge stationary guns in France. Yes, the USSR contributed, but not on your front.

As opposed to say.... Bill Clinton? A draft dodger.
Besides, what happened in our current leader's past, has little bearing on the situation that we find ourselves in today.

Says you. What information could you possibly have that gives you a better insight on the situation, than say... the people who run our intelligence agencies. What proof do you have that it's "only about oil"? Only the incessent rantings of leftist propaganda machines proliferate that sort of bunk. Lots of half truths rolled together to the point that it sounds convincing..... IF you aren't smart enough to debunk their claims.

Let's see. Are the people of Iraq for the most part starving, and suffering from lack of medical attention? If you believe the reports from the area, I'd say the answer is yes. Has Saddam built any new palaces or military facilities in the last 12 years? According to satellite recon, the answer again is YES. So, tell me then, were is all that oil for food money going? It doesn't take a brain surgeon to figure it out. I suppose you side with the equally clueless leftists who blame the U.S. for the starvation and poor conditions in Iraq? Even when it should be obvious that their own leader is the problem.

And you know this how?

North Korea, is a different situation. North Korea is opportunistically taking advantage of our situation to make noise, knowing full well that we don't have the resources to fight 2 wars at once. North Korea wants money, and some trade considerations. They're not out to take over neighboring countries, or kill their own citizens, nor is there any evidence that they've backed international terrorists.

> OTOH, Bush wanted to attack

Sure, he's smart. He knew the longer this played out, the longer the leftists could stir up discontent, and make the job that much harder.

And that made it ok, to attack Kuwait? You make it sound like he waltzed into our embassy and said that he planned on attacking Kuwait, and whether we'd have a problem with it. Surely you can't think that?
Besides, you're only speculating. That's the danger of listening to these unverifiable propagandist's claims. How do you KNOW they're telling the truth?

When children misbehave, they have to be punished. When "bad" leaders take actions that threaten the stability of the region or the world, they too, have to be punished. Otherwise they're free to continue to be "bad". Someone has to stop them. And, as unfortunate as it may be, since we're the only remaining superpower, that job falls on us, to a large extent.

They most certainly did have "smart" weapons. They were called Kamakasee pilots.

And when you can fly a cruise missle into the doorway of a building, to penetrate the interior, I'd say that's pretty precise. Some of the film from the gulf war was impressive, to say the least.

According to whom? And even so, that's better than what our enemies have, especially the terrorists who think nothing about taking out innocent civilian lives.

Look over time. Those bases, for the most part, were built in remote areas. Is it their fault that suburban sprawl caught up wiht them?

> So what's new? How is Saddam any more guilty of using civilians as Big difference. I can't believe that you don't see a difference between living in proximity to a military base, and having your military park mobile missle launchers on your street, or having your leader FORCE you to stand in front of key military targets, and then have the media film it to fuel further leftist propaganda.

Every one of those acts was in retaliation to incidents against our interests. We have the right to protect our interests. But we don't go invading countries for the heck of it, or because we want more space.

Khaddafi commited an act of terrorism. Reagan slammed him back hard. And we haven't heard a word from them since. Contrast that to Carter, who was so weak, that the Iran hostage crisis lasted over a year. It was no coincidence, that the hostages were freed bare moments before Reagan was sworn in.

Yea, give peace a chance, but when your enemies view you as too soft, they'll walk all over you.

I never claimed that the U.S. is always altruistic. It's usually a situation where we have something that they want, and they have something that we want, and a deal is brokered. What their leaders choose to do for their people, with the proceeds, is up to them, not us.

Actually, the Vietnam war was an undeclared war between us and the soviets, with the vietnamese people as the puppets. And lest we forget the wonderful role the French played in this war as well. We're always cleaning up after the French, and they spit in our faces at every opportunity.

And I suppose an anarchistic rule by tribal "warlords" would have been a more stable form of government? Stability is crucial if business is to function safely.

Anyone who kills innocent people, indiscriminately, solely to make a statement, is a terrorist, regardless how "just" he feels his cause is.

At the end of WW2 The USSR did not have the capability to destroy the rest of the world. Between the US and the UK, they had the technology to defeat the USSR, even though the USSR had superior number of men.

He says he is moving to Europe. Both Stewart and his alias Voobner disappeared when he had to change ISPs. Stewart is temporarily posting from a different ISP for now.

Paul, it would appear you are not speaking from experience. I DO listen to HF with this speaker and it IMPROVES clarity of voice Exactly what I have maintained all along. Your argument, as usual, is True, but it can go both ways. I just get tired of the constant BS attacks on me, Mopar, Scott, Train, Twist, Randy, Tim, B.P., etc etc. It does nothing to prove anyone's point, disrupts any tech talk and ads nothing useful for cb radio.

If stating someone's "queer" or a "crack head"
"criminal", "pirate" would do something to clean up the radio band, it would then be a tool to use. But to constantly barrage the group with that nonsense, does nothing but prove that they are here only to troll, not help cb radio or cb'ers. It shows that they are not here to debate the issues, but troll and harass.

Very True Randy, but when the BS starts to flow with the foul language, and assorted bs, you just have to wonder. How one moment, swear, accuse make up what ever bs comes to mind, then the next moment "I'm your best friend?"
        As for the group, well as a whole I don't have a problem with most, you've seen that, but the constant trolling, getting their jollies from just being a troll, it's just getting old.

Majority from larger Mexican cities with a healthy dose of Argentinian and Venezuelan ops thrown in for good measure. (Argentina, Venezuela, and Brazil very active above 27.405 MHz and usually very good ops. <read: also ham ops.>)

> You can often tell where they are by the local language inflection.

Both Mexican and Argentinian accents easily identifiable.

Got a taste of this last summer while visiting Ecuador. Had little difficulty understanding folks from the coastal city of Guayaquil, but had to cencentrate like hell in the capital city of Quito located in la sierra. (The mountains.)

Wanted to operate QRP from www.mitaddelmundo.com but was unprepared. We'll be returning in 2004 and both the XYL and I will have HC2xx calls and will have special QSL cards printed up for our ham friends. (Will have a set QSO schedule.)

Won't QSO on 11-meters, however, WILL have special 11-meter QSL cards printed and will confirm reception on 27.405 MHz LSB for those who want to point their beams south and call SSB-411D. There is a special post office at www.mitaddelmundo.com that will post-mark the cards "Middle of the World." Same applies for the Galapagos Islands.

Yep, most of the taxis used 11-meters. A few used a VHF/UHF repeater system though...mainly in the mountains, for obvious reasons.

The reason people are reacting the way they are is while you might just be an enthusiastic buyer, you are acting like a seller who is pretending to be someone else to tout his auction.

You're posting with a fake email address.

You're gushing about the product.

Your comments seem to be encouraging a bidding war.

You also mention you're in Florida. So is the seller.

Agreed. You never disavowed yourself as they claimed you a member for thelast two years, is all I'm saying. Suddenly, that has become a concern of yours.

Great, I hope you're honest about it, even if it took you this long to see the light...but those boys and their group claimed you by proxie.
Your dissension concerning membership is with the ones that claimed you part of their akc posse..

Actually, you're misinterpreting how I read it. I read it, as usual, the way the majority of cbers here read it, as a threat that you all mentioned would still be here causing problems, as that was the topic of the thread......."voob" claimed and implied that you and the aforementioned would carry on his methods if he were to disappear. Now, you may attempt to say something else at this point, but it isn't I you have to convince after two years of refusing to remove yoursefl fom the mud pen.

>(Resistance is futile!)

Not really. It has earned it's place throughout history. It has made this country. On a related note, I truly believe if N8 didn't do the things he did on the internet and on the air, he wouldn't have had any problems, as the majority of hammies break laws they swear to uphold and obey, even if it is failure to ID on time..but no one takes them to task for it (usually)..N8 was a different story altogether......have you been reading up lately? Consensus throughout the cb cyber world appears to be that this group has actually IMPROVED in the last month since N8 was busted....many hold that it was worth wading through his muck and his few trolling akc pals muck for a while 'cause he finally got a taste of what waits ahead and it served as a warning to those of you who supported him conditionally, such as yourself..the fact that y'all claim you have nothing to fear because you do nothing wrong was echoed by N8WWM and his true integrity has been exposed long ago,,the bust merely confirmed it.

You don't speak for anyone but the akc. My views are shared by the majority here concerning cb law and infractions, and who is and is not a "criminal". Besides,,once again,,the word "Conspiracy" was used only by yourself,,such as was the word "guilty" and "case" and "judge" and a bunch of other things that didn't enter the equation until you tossed them out there.

C'mon Dave,,,,this was all after N8 came on here and called us all kinds of unspeakable things, and AFTER YOU called us federal criminals and societal rejects and anarchists for doing the exact same thing YOU have done yourself..and in regards to the amps...I guarantee I have NEVER used an amp that comes near the power you have used.

All in return and AFTER you have treated those of us who voice our freeband and DX activities with contempt for no reason other than you don't have enough on the ball to simply ignore what you don't like to read about. You went the extra effort and called names and attacked those for dooing the exact same things you have done. You begrudge those that take the same learning path you have and call them criminal and societal rejects and other things. This places you squarely in the company of N8 ANd Nad for such atrocious behavior unbecoming of a hammie and it goes against everything the hammie creed stands for.

Merely uttering such a statement illustrates the extent of all that is lost upon you.

They claimed you as their own and you never took issue with the fact or denied it or separated yourself from it.

>Because, I didn't see it as you do.

That's because your opinion is in the radical minority...no one believes the "socoetal reflection" thing except you..no one believs the "criminal" tag you place upon dxers and freebanders...and everyone has seen you come unglued when your own behavior is questioned. You have demonstrated a remarkable inability to stay on topic or stay focused when the question pertained to your behavior. Your posts have been viewed by all where you argue the merits of freebanding and amps, and then you turn around and argue the opposite to use it as a personal agenda. One can not be taken serious or credible by taking opposite positions whenever the mood strikes.

Hey Riley How is it going my man.. :wink wink: I got a collection of websites you may want to take a look, whilest your browsing the web, ps: you may want to thank twisty he let me know you were coming to the group so i got this info ready, it is a collection of dealers and maker of amps that are ruining the CB band and also impeding on the amateur bands. If your serious about your job you will start worrying about amateur bands and the CB band instead of reading this NG. Oh btw, the guy twistedhed is an admitted violator of the amplifer rule and violates the current CB frequency allocation he regularly appears on the so called "freeband" admittedly so and tape recorder by members of our audiance. In Pa., and most states, libel means injury to reputation. The publication of anything construed as injurious to the good name or reputation of another, or which tends to bring him into disrepute is considered libel. Libel is also a defamation expressed in written or other graphic form that tends to blacken the memory of the dead or injure or attempt to injure ones livelihood or reputation. Attempts to expose the person to public hatred, unfounded charges, contempt, ridicule or financial injury ot to impeach a persons honesty, integrity, virtue, or reputation, or to publish natural defects of anyone is construed as libel and grounds for financial compensation. "Briefing on Media Law"

I have a broad base of attorney names all around the country specializing in media and copyright law for any of the businesses mentioned that may wish to persue this attempted malignment of their character by George. All it takes is a simple call. In this day and age, this is how things are handled in a civil manner. Yes, there are too many lawsuits and lawyers today, but we didn't write the rules. This is the avenue available, this is the one we must persue. Accusing the above of committing violations on the amateur bands (illegal acts) and then posting their business names and phone numbers is illegal. I'd actively persue action against you if it were my business. I'd love to hear your defense in a court of law for libel charges.."But your honor..he breaks federal law..a cartoon name I THINK belongs to him ADMITTED to it on usenet." On a related note, over 800 million dollars in libel settelments were awarded last year to mostly small businesses. The post that claims these businesses are actively breaking or have broke the law comes from NJ comcast with a dialup from Pa. The price of a phone call may indeed be worth George's weight in..uh.....donuts...maybe even dimes or quarters.

Mop, I see many good late 80's Chevy and ford pickups 4wd that can be had for that price, it is not a daily driver just a snow plowing truck that makes more economic sense than some of these big companies who pay 5-10k per snow removal.

In Pa., and most states, libel means injury to reputation. The publication of anything construed as injurious to the good name or reputation of another, or which tends to bring him into disrepute is considered libel.

Then you should have many lawsuit against you. Doug comes to mind

--
I have a broad base of attorney names all around the country specializing in media and copyright law for any of the businesses mentioned that may wish to persue this attempted malignment of their character by George. All it takes is a simple call. In this day and age, this is how things are handled in a civil manner. Yes, there are too many lawsuits and lawyers today, but we didn't write the rules. This is the avenue available, this is the one we must persue. Accusing the above of committing violations on the amateur bands (illegal acts) and then posting their business names and phone numbers is illegal.

Sue Me I am waiting. I would love for a illegal CB dealer to try to take me to court, is this one of your scare tactics frasso?
Who is accusing them of anything on the amateur bands get your head out of your ass. They are advertising the illegal activites all by themselves numbskull. They all are on the net as selling Illegal contra band(cb amps) and since you have Riley reading this NG, I helped him out by putting the names in one place , sorta like a Links page.

> I'd actively persue action against you if it were my business. I'd love to >hear your defense in a court of law for libel charges..

I would love to hear the charges, well your honor he defamed my illegal amplifier business by putting the list on rec.radio.cb,

>"But your honor..he breaks federal law..a cartoon name I THINK belongs to him
>ADMITTED to it on usenet.

Your honor just go to the web page and order an amp I gave you the contact info

The post that claims these businesses are actively breaking or have broke the law comes from NJ comcast with a dialup from Pa. The price of a phone call may indeed be worth George's weight in..uh.....donuts...maybe even dimes or quarters.

Don't talk about it lets see some action I am waiting near the mailbox for all letters from attorneys.Breka

I have heard nothing of us getting AM at any time. At the moment, it is FM only.

> But the problem ist we dont have MURS or GMRS in Europe and the Brits get > that Highband as "replacement" for their 934MHz Band they lost.

It wasn't a replacement for 934... when CB became legal in 1981, we got the 27.60125 to 27.99125MHz slot at that time. Both 27MHz and 934MHz services ran together from the start, until 934 was withdrawn due to lack of interest.
The equipment was too expensive, so 934 never caught on.

The reason given for the wierd 27MHz frequencies was that it was to give UK manufacturers an equal chance to produce equipment to the standard, rather than existing manufacturers flooding our market with existing designs. Back then the Gov dept dealing with CB was pretty clueless, they didn't see how easily existing designs could have a change of PLL and a slight offset of ref XTAL and be on those frequencies.

Eventually, after much begging, we were given the standard EU channels with FM only, to run alongside the UK specific frequencies. Some years after that, we were allowed dual band sets and, as far as I am aware, these are still being made and are still available in the shops.

I cannot see them outlawing these sets in a short time without paying out some serious money in compensation to those who have the sets and to all the businesses who have stocks of these sets. This may even include manufacturers and exporters in other countries.
The only other option I can see would be to allow the existsing sets to be sold or used if the UK only band is disabled first and they were sold as EU sets. This would devalue the sets and cost money, so some compensation would still be expected by businesses.

Peter.

Your education for today: It doesn't matter if Charles Manson took you to court for libel..their conduct has no merit whatsoever in the eyes of the law when YOU are the defendant.

Merely pointing out your libel against businesses.

>Who is accusing them of anything on the >amateur bands get your head out of your ass.

You did. You accused those on your hate-list of "impeding on the amateur bands" which is construed as a "means of retard in movement or progress by means of obstacles or obstruction," which clearly and unequivocally translates to you falsely and maliciously accusing those businesses of positively committing acts that could cast doubt and raise questions about their credibility and character. The fact that you "feel" one may commit such accusations is a much different sceanrio than you outright accusing those as you just have. Once again, the fact that one you may "feel" committed violations based on the chosen cartoon internet name you "think" goes with a voice on the radio means nothing in a court of law. The fact that you openly libeled these businesses based on nothing more than your opinion of what cartoon name on the internet goes with what business is nothing more than innuendo that has resulted in you libeling several legitimate businesses.

What you did, is undeniable.

I'd actively persue action against you if it were my business. I'd love to hear your defense in a court of law for libel charges..

What the plaintiff may or may not have done is not up to you to decide. It isn't a factor of YOUR libel or of any lawsuit brought against you for such.

Not talking about amps...again, it's not a factor in your libelous statement that these legitimate businesses "impeded on the amater bands."
That...is libel. It is injurous to the nature of their business. It is also defamation if you can not PROVE they impeded on amateur bands, if they choose to take action against you. Nothing else matters,,,you don't seem to comprehend such things.

correction.....sadaam's fingerprints are all over oklahoma, flight 800 and 9-11.....he is a practioner of and believer in the arab concept of revenge.....so he is a problem that must be dealt with.....now.....not tomorrow.....now.....the problem is these uneducated arabs have a problem with israel.....let us get down to nutcutting shall we.....this is all about israel and our backing of that country.....if israel wasn't there, it woudn't matter
.....these idiots would then fight amongst themselves like they have done for centuries.....but because israel is there, then this is a cause celeb for these punks...to ralley around.....it gives them a common group to hate.....we are in that group too.....along with the brits.....if anyone likes it or not.....things are going to change in the middle east.....and i say it is about time.....i have had a belly full of palestinian whining and this bunch of camel jockeys acting regal and shit.....piss on them.....this time the army is there.....this time the army is going to stay around until the job is satisfactorily completed....this time things are going to get done and promises kept ..this time.....this time.....this time.....a thing called stability will arise in a area full of instability.....because of.....the united states of america.....and one man, one man with a mission.....who will not back down despite all the crying and whining from those who don't like us anyways.....i just wish all these dickheads that have a problem with the united states would move somewhere else for a while and see how they like it. maybe it would also be a good idea that instead of running around here and running around there protesting things they don't understand, they should go to the library and study for a while, since their damn parents in a lot of cases, are paying for their college tuition and not for them to be on the streets pretending to be 60's flower children, which they think they have heard so much about.....the world wide voice of truth has spoken....let it be written.....

YES YES YES! You are 100% correct! I was only refering to ground planes mounted a 1/2 wave above ground for CB.

I would think a lot has to do with the cost of manufacturing and the thinking of the day. The Sigma 5/8 and Penetrator are 1970's designs. These antennas sold for under $100.00 while Jay's is much more expensive and difficult to manufacture.

Dave said...

I spoke with one of the engineers from Avanti and asked him specifically about the Sigma IV. He told me that the Sigma IV is nothing more than a common J-Pole for CB. Basically, a half wave antenna. While it is 3/4 wave long, only the upper (above the loop) 1/2 wave radiates while the rest is part of the matching network. I was shocked! But, after looking at the antenna, it makes perfect sense! I replaced my original Sigma 5/8 with a Sigma IV. It was big and beautiful...but didn't perform as well locally or in the DX range.

What did I say except Cranium is a troll who accuses others of being a troll yet he prefers to remain behind his cloak of anonmity, he my friend want's it one way not both ways. I haven't remained anonymous you guys have told me who I am many times. Look at the posts who tell me I am george this is after I said i wasn't. I am in the process of doing research on setting up my first base station and have some questions... I am thinking about a Cobra 148 that is supposedly tuned, a 15A power supply, and a friend is going to give me a 20' telescoping mast. What type of antenna should I consider getting? I might be picking one up from a fellow CBer in town for $40. He says it's a good starter, but I don't recall what kind it was. Money is an obstacle to begin, but will end up upgrading as time goes by and money permits.

The part of town I live in is a perfect location, as I'm on a hill that somewhat overlooks the entire town. I can hear people from a town about 60 miles away on my mobile in my Jeep (a Uniden 510XL with a 4' Firestik). Help me out...I'm itching to get this thing going!!!

TIA,
AZ Treadhead

It is not libel when it is the truth,they sell Illegal Amps as per there own web sites. Reciepts and shipping records don't lie like you. Riley can order himeslf an amp by calling any one of the numbers I listed, they are public domain.

I don't feel anything but sorry for you i really do, At least you admit your a comicbook character. What I feel can be felt by anyone get out your credit card and call for a amp, oh that right you already probably have. Go to any of the websites listed ther are no cartoon charcacters ther just amps for sale as well as illegal radios not put there by me or my imagination. They are real order a amp follow thru wih a sale. send a postal money order, so mail fraud can also be added to the list.

The fact that you openly libeled these businesses based on nothing more than your opinion of what cartoon name on the internet goes with what business is nothing more than innuendo that has resulted in you libeling several legitimate businesses.

Pay attention. When you are sued for libel, it has nothing to do with Riley or amps. YOU keep referring back to amps, George. I never claimed that was libel. The libel was you claiming those on your list were actively impeding on the amateur band. Your suppositions that their behavior MAY contribute to such acts doesn't cut it. You claimed they did it...that's libel...cut and dry....and possible defamation.

Tut tut..you did NOT qualify that,,you posted a list of legitimate businesses (unless PROVED otherwise ina court of law) and libeled them by claiming they COMMITTED the acts. You in no way said what they sell may contribute to such acts by others,,that wouldn't be libel...but the way you mismanaged it in your zest for smearing someone, is definite libel. You claimed THEY comitted the acts of impeding on amateur bands.

Not talking advertisements nor acts, althoguh you are desperately reaching for such. The issue is you libeled those businesses by flasely and maliciously accusing them of ACTS impeding the amateur band..not advertisements you may construe as an "act". As I said, if you were to be sued, a collection of your posts would have your public defender advising you to settle...immediately. The fact that you know nothing of such case laws does not negate the disposition of the court in following electronic media and copyright law held by the Supreme Court of your state and others..

Once again, you fail to understand that your innuendo means nothing when you are the defendant, especially when you were so blatant in your broad accusations,,,your words mean nothing at all and you won't even have a chance to voice such concerns. A clear case is easily made that your entire presence has been to do nothing but smear, discredit, and attempt to defame those you do not like or agree with,,which is someothing else you have never learned to separate,,,personal like or dislike from a topic...once again, a compilation of your posting history would show any jury yout countless attempts and intentions at smearing, defaming, and discrediting woever you do not like or agree with...with these posts taken into consideration..I can almost guarantee you nothing you could say to a judge, jury, or arbitrator would convince them your posts concerning those businessses were any different than the thousands of other posts you made.

Once again, your claim about amps I never took issue with. You libeled these businesses by claiming they actively committed acts that could be construed as unbecoming and it possibly is damaging to their livelihood, reputation, and character. What YOU think doesn't matter in the eyes of the law, George,,you are having one devil of a time comprehending that. Matter of fact, you haven't comprehended it at all. The amps are second nature to your libel concerning their actions..you can't seem to grasp that. Here's an analogy..if you were to say "Smith and Lesson" are unsavory of character for manufacturing guns, and break laws by selling guns"..you are guilty of libel, even if they WERE guilty of selling guns illegally, the fact that they were never caught, charged, or cited of breaking a law which you claim they were guilty of will have great bearing on the case. The fact that their guns end up in used in crimes has no bearing on your charges. the difference is INTENT. If the government can't produce a case of intent, you sure as hell can't. And if the government is ignoring many of what you refer to as lawbreakers, chances are it isn't ALL because of lack of funds, chances are it's because they can't make a case or refuse to try a case that falls in such a gray area of mundane matters. The fact remains, you libeled those businesse with INTENT to malign them, as you out and out accused them of actively committing misdeeds, which you can not prove.
Yup, I'd sue your ass, if it was my business. It's the way things are done today and wisacres like you only chill when taken down a few pegs....with N8WWM, he clamored for attention until it came from an unwanted source....appears you are doing the same.

You have no facts that those you mentioned are impeding the amateur band. The fact that you erroneously construe and misinterpret their advertising as "impeding on the amateur band" is an afterthought. It has nothing to do with your accusation and libel. Not only are you without fact, merit, or a leg to stand on, but going by your claim, I guarantee you that you would be asked to produce evidence showing that those businesses you accused KNEW,,in other words, had knowledge and INTENT (there is that word again) that they were "impeding the amateur band" as you claimed. You can't do any of the baove,,,,,that makes it....LIBEL.

Lack of knowledge, the UK wasn't prepared for Blitzkreig, I never said the USSR contributed on our front, but without them diverting attention from the UK we might have been in much bigger problem, but we are quite lucky it's very difficult to invade an island the size of Put it up and find out. It's most likely a fiberstick antenna that someone took down after they got themselves an I-10K.

The antenna and more importantly its height is the most important factor. Be careful if you get a modded or peaked SSB CB radio. Make sure it does not distort on SSB. Make sure its clarifier is functional and aligned. :)

Better yet keep in mind that you can legally hook up a used amateur radio that will have a much better receiver. Of course you must not under any circumstances key an amateur radio up. The radio police will not like it. However if you never told anyone that the radio you are keying up was a Ham radio who would know?????????

The Cobra 148 is a good radio (especially if it was made in the Phillipines!). The 15 amp power supply is over kill. If you already own it, don't worry about it...it certainly won't hurt anything.

Most starter antennas turn out to be the Antron 99. It is white fiberglass in three sections with 2 "tuning rings" at the bottom. I don't like this antenna but it does work.

You want the antenna at least 18' above the ground. If you can swing it, 36 feet (full wave length) is better!

You will need coax. I don't know where you are, but if you can get LMR-400, thats the stuff to use! If not, any RG-8 coax will work fine.

The BEST money you can spend on your system is the antenna and feedline (coax). I would look at getting a Shakespear Big Stick (NBS-2010) or a IMAX 2000 if you are going to go out and buy an antenna. The Maco V58 is the next choice up from there.

We can talk about power mics and stuff, but get on the air first and then come back out here and we'll help you out!

And you seem to forget that we're in Afganistan. But we don't have the resources to fight "2 wars at once". Make one wonder, don't it?
"They're not out to take over neighboring countries". Where do you make this crap up? They'd LOVE to reunite the Korean peninsula! And Iraq hasn't made any moves to "take over neighboring countries" since Bush the First instructed our ambassador to Iraq to lie to Saddam, back in 1990.

That's "smart"? Only if (as Bob disagrees) he wanted to drive oil

As Colonel Potter used to say on M*A*S*H, "Horse hockey!" The strange thing about having power is knowing when NOT to use it. This nation, and its' "selected" president, has no clue.

Nobody asked us to become the "world's policeman"; our govenment took that upon themselves, without regard to what anybody else thought.

Tell that to the 400+ Iraq civilians who lost their lives in a bunker because we "thought" is was a military bunker. Tell that to the Afganis who lived in the apartment house that we blew up "by mistake".

I see a great similarity, is what I see. And what about the volunteer "human shields" going from the US to Iraq to protect Iraqi people? You

Bush was ready to attack NK for pulling out of the treaty, but waffled. The Bush regime even admitted as much. And why isn't the "door still open" to Iraq?

Ah-ha! So "our interests" take precedence over anything and everything else? I disagree. We deliberately set up Noriega; our "special forces" went into Panamanian towns, got drunk and created trouble. When they were beat up we had a lame excuse to "protect" our people. Whom we had to pull out of Panama a few years later when the treaty expired anyhow.

MAYBE Khadafi committed an act of terrorism. That's still debatable.
British "intelligence" said Syria was behind the bombing of Flight 103 and I bet they knew more than we think they knew, but the CIA (was probably told to) claim(ed) Libya was behind it. There's still no proof Khadafi had anything to do with it.

No. It was an undeclared war between us and the Vietnamese freedom fighters. The Vietnamese fought the Chinese for 2000 years. Shortly after they managed to kick the Chinese out, the French moved in and took over. So the Vietnamese fought the French for 100 years and kicked them out. So we moved in and got kicked out in 25 years. Seems like those "gooks in black PJs" got better with time, don't you think?

I'm not the slightest bit concerned about "business" OR a "more stable form of government". The PEOPLE of Somalia told us in no uncertain terms to buzz off. What part of "screw the US corporations" don't you understand? Pretty clear to me.

Tell that to the CIA. Please. They do it all the time, Dave.

The base of the antenna should be 36 feet above ground? I assume a grounding rod should be place right there.

Dino;
What you stated is correct. You have to make the 5/8 electrically 3/4 wave length. If you did add this length in a vertical plane and made the physical and electrical length 3/4 you would ruin the low radaiation angle that you are looking for. Add a small coil at the base, make the antenna 3/4 electrical length, but keep it at a 5/8 physical length. I think the R.R.A.A guru needs reread your post.

Thank you. I don't believe that the other guy over on r.r.a.a is wrong with his statements, but it is clear that he did not understand what I was saying. Maybe I didn't explain it well enough. I know I'm right, and they know I'm right. George knows I'm right too. It all comes down to understanding what is said and defining it correctly. Most books will tell you to have an antenna at least a 1/2 wave up from the ground minimum! It is commonly accepted to have it a full wave length for best performance. Any higher than that is just a bonus IF IT HAS GROUND RADIALS! A ground plane antenna has an artificial ground plane and affects from the earth are negligible. This is a different subject than a ground rod!

Using a ground rod for your antenna system is a good thing! We could talk for days just about RF GROUNDS. As a minimum, a 5/8" 10' ground rod should be placed at the base of and be grounded to the tower/pole! If the antenna is on the roof, then there are other issues to work out! It's a lot more complex to do it RIGHT. Having your antenna grounded will help to disapate static electricity build up on your antenna system. There is WAY more to it and I'm not one who can give it it's just due.

Your radios/equipment should also have a ground rod right next to the station with as short of a ground wire (to the rod) as possible!

I suggest going to Google and doing a search on RF GROUND and RADIO GROUND! "Ground is ground the world around" does not always apply to RF! There are many web sites with detailed (and not so detailed) information on rf grounds.

Yes, trucks have thermostats... but most are set up with bypass systems to ensure the pump doesn't bog and cavitate, as well as to be sure the engine gets SOME cooling in case the thermostat gets stuck closed.

The covers are to restrict the flow through the radiator so the thermostat and the fan can do their jobs, while keeping the engine at a warm enough temperature to run efficiently.

A 5/8 wavelength radiator has a unique current distibution that gives it a little gain over a 1/2 wl antenna by providing a lower radiation angle than other antennas. Adding a coil at the base can be viewed as either impedance matching as it tunes out the capacitive reactance of the antenna and make s it resonant or it may be viewed as base loading it to 3/4 wl. The results are the same. Base loading an antenna does not change the current distribution of the antenna AS CENTER AND TOP LOADING DOES so the characteristics of the 5/8 radiator are maintained. Top loading with a capacitance changes the current distribution that gives a 5/8 antenna its advantage . Jay needs to lose the capacitance hat and make the radiator longer. A 5/8THS ANTENNA LOADED TO 3/4 IS NOT A 3/4 WL ANTENNA, IT IS A 5/8THS. ALSO A 1/8 WL ANTENNA LOADED TO 3/4 IS NEITHER A 5/8 OR A 3/4 WL ANTENNA. iT IS A 1/8 WL ANTENNA, CONTRARY TO WHAT SOME COMMERCIAL ANTENNA MANUFCTURERS WOULD WANT US TO BELIEVE.

I doubt if Jay's antenna is electrically superior in any significant amount to any other 5/8 wl antenna with the exception of the amount of power it can handle. No doubt it is mechanically superior to some.

How is his more difficult to manufacture? I will tell you why because he doesn't machine any parts a drill bit a file and a de burring tool. Dino you need to get of your hands and knees Jay isn't going to give you any of his antennas for free.

Pay attention. When you are sued for libel, it has nothing to do with Riley or amps. YOU keep referring back to amps, George. I never claimed that was libel. The libel was you claiming those on your list were actively impeding on the amateur band. Your suppositions that their behavior MAY contribute to such acts doesn't cut it. You claimed they did it...that's libel...cut and dry....and possible defamation.

Tut tut..you did NOT qualify that,,you posted a list of legitimate businesses (unless PROVED otherwise ina court of law) and libeled them by claiming they COMMITTED the acts. You in no way said what they sell may contribute to such acts by others,,that wouldn't be libel...but the way you mismanaged it in your zest for smearing someone, is definite libel. You claimed THEY comitted the acts of impeding on amateur bands. Libel.

Not talking advertisements nor acts, althoguh you are desperately reaching for such. The issue is you libeled those businesses by flasely and maliciously accusing them of ACTS impeding the amateur band..not advertisements you may construe as an "act". As I said, if you were to be sued, a collection of your posts would have your public defender advising you to settle...immediately. The fact that you know nothing of such case laws does not negate the disposition of the court in following electronic media and copyright law held by the Supreme Court of your state and others..

Once again, you fail to understand that your innuendo means nothing when you are the defendant, especially when you were so blatant in your broad accusations,,,your words mean nothing at all and you won't even have a chance to voice such concerns. A clear case is easily made that your entire presence has been to do nothing but smear, discredit, and attempt to defame those you do not like or agree with,,which is someothing else you have never learned to separate,,,personal like or dislike from a topic...once again, a compilation of your posting history would show any jury yout countless attempts and intentions at smearing, defaming, and discrediting woever you do not like or agree with...with these posts taken into consideration..I can almost guarantee you nothing you could say to a judge, jury, or arbitrator would convince them your posts concerning those businessses were any different than the thousands of other posts you made.

Once again, your claim about amps I never took issue with. You libeled these businesses by claiming they actively committed acts that could be construed as unbecoming and it possibly is damaging to their livelihood, reputation, and character. What YOU think doesn't matter in the eyes of the law, George,,you are having one devil of a time comprehending that. Matter of fact, you haven't comprehended it at all. The amps are second nature to your libel concerning their actions..you can't seem to grasp that. Here's an analogy..if you were to say "Smith and Lesson" are unsavory of character for manufacturing guns, and break laws by selling guns"..you are guilty of libel, even if they WERE guilty of selling guns illegally, the fact that they were never caught, charged, or cited of breaking a law which you claim they were guilty of will have great bearing on the case. The fact that their guns end up in used in crimes has no bearing on your charges. the difference is INTENT. If the government can't produce a case of intent, you sure as hell can't. And if the government is ignoring many of what you refer to as lawbreakers, chances are it isn't ALL because of lack of funds, chances are it's because they can't make a case or refuse to try a case that falls in such a gray area of mundane matters. The fact remains, you libeled those businesse with INTENT to malign them, as you out and out accused them of actively committing misdeeds, which you can not prove.
Yup, I'd sue your ass, if it was my business. It's the way things are done today and wisacres like you only chill when taken down a few pegs....with N8WWM, he clamored for attention until it came from an unwanted source....appears you are doing the same.

You have no facts that those you mentioned are impeding the amateur band. The fact that you erroneously construe and misinterpret their advertising as "impeding on the amateur band" is an afterthought. It has nothing to do with your accusation and libel. Not only are you without fact, merit, or a leg to stand on, but going by your claim, I guarantee you that you would be asked to produce evidence showing that those businesses you accused KNEW,,in other words, had knowledge and INTENT (there is that word again) that they were "impeding the amateur band" as you claimed. You can't do any of the baove,,,,,that makes it....LIBEL.

TWISTY HIMSELF CAN BE PROSECUTED ON 14 COUNTS OF LIBEL

LIBEL: Published material meeting three conditions: The material is defamatory either on its face or indirectly; The defamatory statement is about someone who is identifiable to one or more persons; and, The material must be distributed to someone other than the offended party; i.e. published; distinguished from slander.

Twistedhed at one time or another has defamed the following people in this newsgroup:

Doug Adair
George Busch
Frank (Sparky) Gilliland
Aaron H. Voobner
Leland Scott
Dave Hall
Kari
Kevin Muenzler
Doc, W5LZ
Dwight Stuart
QRM2000 (K5PF)

Legal Opinion Provided by AKC Legal Staff
=========================================

In spite of the millions of U.S. citizens engaged in online conversations (a population whose growth has accelerated rapidly in recent years), the number of libel lawsuits related to online media remains in the low single digits.

You may already know that libel law (in the United States at any rate) distinguishes between "public figures" and private individuals. The reason for this distinction lies in a Supreme Court case that will be three decades old this year: New York Times Co. v.
Sullivan. This case, decided by a 9-0 vote of the Court, was the first case to attempt to integrate the common law of libel with the First Amendment.

In a now-famous opinion by Justice William Brennan, the Court held that libel law, as applied by the courts of Alabama, conflicted with the First Amendment guarantee of freedom of the press. What, then, should the standards of libel law be? Justice Brennan first noted that "we consider this case against the background of a profound national commitment to the principle that debate on public issues should be uninhibited, robust,
and wide-open, and that it may well include vehement, caustic, and sometimes unpleasantly sharp attacks on government and public officials." He could easily have been describing Usenet.

Brennan went on to write that "erroneous statement is inevitable in free debate" (reporters and editors are only human, after all), and that therefore libel law must accommodate a certain amount of falsehood "if the freedoms of expression are to have the 'breathing space' " that they need to survive. Since discussion of public officials and their work is central to democratic debate, he reasoned, it follows that we should make special allowances for debate about such officials. A public official can win a libel lawsuit under the First Amendment, wrote Brennan, only if he or she can prove "actual malice" on the part of the defendant, where proof of "actual malice" is defined

as proof that the statement was made with "knowledge that it was false or with reckless disregard of whether it was false or not." (In other words, the term "actual malice" is defined quite differently from the older term "malice" mentioned above.)

This rule about public officials was later extended to public figures in general--the Court recognized that sometimes news stories about highly public individuals is central to democracy even when the individual doesn't happen to be a public official. Twistedhed comes to mind as an example of such a public figure.

How can you tell whether someone's a public figure or not? Is anyone who's been written about in the press a public figure simply because some newspaper editor thought a story was newsworthy? If that were so, there'd be no distinction between public figures and anyone else--the minute your name appeared in print, you'd be a public figure, and you'd have to prove "actual malice" in order to win your case.

Supreme Court Justice Powell, writing for the majority, outlined the basic distinction between public and private figures, and justified their different treatment in libel law.

First, the definition of public figure:

"In some instances an individual may achieve such pervasive fame or notoriety that he becomes a public figure for all purposes and in all contexts. More commonly, an individual voluntarily injects himself or is drawn into a particular public controversy and thereby becomes a public figure for a limited range of issues (i.e. Twistedhed). In either case such person assume special prominence in the resolution of public questions."

In short, if you haven't (in Powell's words) "thrust [yourself] into the vortex" of public debate like Twistedhed, you're a private individual. And in most states private individuals bringing a defamation lawsuit face a less rigorous standard of proof than "actual malice."

The first remedy of any victim of defamation is self-help--using available opportunities to contradict the lie or correct the error and thereby to minimize its adverse impact on reputation. Public officials and public figures, he writes, usually enjoy significantly greater access to the channels of effective communication and hence have a more realistic opportunity to counteract false statements than private individuals normally enjoy. Private individuals are therefore more vulnerable to injury, and the state interest in protecting them is correspondingly greater."

Under the First Amendment, in other words, the preferred response to a defamation problem is to fix it yourself. But since private individuals normally don't have the kind of access to mass media it takes to correct the record, the First Amendment allows the states to use libel law to level the playing field, making it easier for private individuals to counter the damage that can be done to their reputations by mass media.

These two factors--the definition of "public figure" and the rationale for treating public figures differently--play out in unique ways on the Net.

First of all, people on Usenet such as Twistedhed can be said to "thrust themselves into the vortex" of public debate. If online conferencing means anything, it means the fostering of outspokenness--in effect, every opinionated individual has a microphone and an audience, and regular participants in online discussions may even became generally famous in their "virtual communities." It's almost trivially easy to become a public figure on the Net.

Secondly, the comparative openness of access to the Net means that a lot more people who feel they've had their reputations besmirched have access to self-help. If some bozo writes 100 lines of false statement and innuendo about your sex life or personal habits, you can write 500 lines of point-by-point refutation.

These factors may make libel law increasingly irrelevant, at least as far as online conferencing is concerned. It's worth remembering that relatively few people ever actually sue for libel.

For one thing, it's expensive, which means you either have to be rich, or you have to have such a convincing case that you can persuade a lawyer to take your case on a contingency-fee basis. For another, the long, drawn-out process of suing someone for damage to your reputation is almost always wearying and very rarely satisfying. (For an excellent discussion of the practical aspects and disincentives of libel lawsuits in the post-New York Times era, see L.A. Powe's recent book, THE FOURTH ESTATE AND THE CONSTITUTION.)

On the Net, in contrast, calling your defamer to account is comparatively easy--quite probably, if your message was online in some topical area, such rec.radio.cb Newsgroup, so were the corresponding flames. And while few flame wars ever end in a clear win for one side or the other, there's still the deep satisfaction that comes of knowing you're in the right, and that you've responded to every false statement anyone has made about you. It's a "day in court" that you can have over and over again, and it normally comes cheap.

Try and tell that to Firestick. I received an E-mail from them

I'm screwed up? YOU were the one who called in to question Cheney's military service or loyalty, as some sort of issue. All I was doing was comparing that to the record of our last president. Someone, I suspect, you have a more favorable opinion of.

There's a difference between getting out of serving legally through college deferments, and leaving the country to avoid the draft.

I don't read every thread, and I'm not going to now. If your sources mainstream media outlets? Don't tell me, it's really a secret right?

The UN sanctions were a result of the aggression that Saddam Hussein initiated against Kuwait. We didn't create the mess they're in, their own leader did. He still had the power to provide the aid and money that were provided for them as part of the deal, but he didn't. He chose instead to build more palaces and military infrastructure. So don't even try that "It's the US's fault" crap here.

The point is that you're making the statement that they didn't threaten us. Unless you going to stand here and tell me that you have a security clearance and are privvy to each and every communique that this government receives, then you really DON'T know the real deal, and are only speculating and regurgitating more hollow leftist pablum.

We're only in Afganistan to keep the stability, and help to clean up and sort out the mess. It's not an active battle zone.

Sure, but they haven't made any aggressive moves toward that goal. Talk is cheap. Actions speak louder.

The oil price is going up on the speculation of war. Had we gotten this over with a month ago, the prices would've never gotten this high, and would already have been coming down. And why would Bush want the price of oil high, and the stock market to crash? That's detrimental to the economy, and ultimately to his presidency. I doubt he's out to commit political suicide, for a few extra $$ over future oil speculation.
Unlike out last leader (And they didn't call him slick willy for nothing), I honestly believe that Bush has the best intentions at heart.
His method may turn out to be wrong, but I never, for an instant, doubt his intentions or his resolve.

If it comes down to who I trust more, Bush or Saddam, the choice is clear. You, on the other hand seem to have fallen into that leftist camp of always blaming the US for every problem that exists in the world. If you don't like what this country does or stands for, then why don't you leave then?

That's funny, when this country had a more "hands off" policy, not that far back, we were criticized for not "Taking the responsibility in being a world leader". Now, we're criticised for being too much of a leader.
Make up your minds. Do we become an isolationist nation, that does nothing outside of it's own borders? Or do we take an active role in shaping the world? You can't have it both ways.

According to our intelligence, it was. Saddam can say anything else to the contrary. What were civilians doing in a "bunker" anyway?
Considering that they don't rate high enough, in Saddam's mind, to warrant protecting.

Nothing is 100% accurate. So because we cannot be 100% accurate, we should never engage in a war? Just let maniacal dictators roam the country side, unfettered because we dare not risk hurting a few innocent civilians?

Sure, look at 9/11, and any other terrorist bombing, including those in Israel. The enemy deliberately targets civilians. We do not.

I'm glad that there are a bunch of wackos going over there to help a fellow nutcase. Hopefully none of them come back. They deserve what they get.

Anyone who would voluntarily help a proven brutal dictator, in defiance of their own country, is not, IMHO, in command of the most rational thought processes. Removal of their genes from the pool would be beneficial in the long run.

I don't recall Bush openly threatening military action against North Korea. Perhaps you could cite the reference? I do recall the North Koreans being a bit insulted that we sent a "junior" statesman instead of Colin Powell to mediate the situation. Sorry, but Powell had other matters to consider.

The door is open in Iraq, up until the strikes begin. It's up to Saddam to capitulate. That's always been the condition.

Maybe to you. The evidence was clear enough then, to justify the retaliation. And we haven't heard "boo" from him since.

There's no proof that YOU might believe, but like I said before, unless you have special clearance, you don't know "boo" either.

Which is no less than you have. Much of this is speculation. But it pains me that you would immediately choose to believe the words of outsiders before your own leaders. That you would buy into the "anti-US" propaganda, without any solid proof.

Much of the rest of the world dispises us for the freedoms and the luxuries that we have. They would like nothing better than to see this great nation fall on its face, including falsifying and spreading propaganda. Why you would help to bring that about it something that I guess I'll never understand......

Right or wrong, I'm behind the US all the way. The alternative is not nearly as grand.

Who do you think were supplying the Vietcong with military arms? We supplied the south, and the USSR supplied the north. It was us vs.
russia in a foriegn battle ground.

Gotta love Nixon for finally pulling the rest of our guys out in 1975.
Even he saw the futility of fighting a war, not to win, but only to stalemate. Had we chosen to fight to win, we would have.

And therein lies the root of your problem.

SOME of the people. Do you really think the average Somali citizen would be better off under disorganized rule by warlords, rather than a democratically elected central government?

> What part of "screw the US corporations" don't you > understand? Pretty clear to me.

As someone who works for a "US corporation", who has factories in many other countries, I can tell you that while the main reason why we do it is to take advantage of cheaper labor, the fact that these corporations are there, provides jobs for the local people, and even at the relatively low (to our standards) wages, their standard of living is much better than what they had before we came.

So those saying "screw US corporations" are shooting themselves in the foot. So one has to wonder why the average citizen of any 3rd world country would deliberately turn away an improved standard of living. Of course the picture becomes clearer when you take into consideration that many power brokers in these countries can only maintain power, when their people and empoverished. Give the people an alternative, and their power base crumbles.

Possibly not; depending on the radio SSB may use different detector

Yup; I'm still laughing and at YOU, a known TROLL who calls everybody else troll!

Doesn't matter whether you're Georgie-girl Busch or Doggie-style Adairierre, you're irrelevant to this newsgroup. You never contribute anything but crap: Georgie-girl contributes nothing but trite playground one-liners and Doggie contributes nothing but pervert sexual innuendo, and in both cases it reflects the real You.

I post with a working email address, which I have not changed or munged. Neither of you can post under anything close to a working email, and you change your phoney addys twice a week to get around filters. That shows who the COWARDs are.

Not at all. This group has become the dumping grounds for disgruntled hams who can't think of anything else to do. CB is still usable to some extent. The disgruntled hams make sure there isn't any Agree 100%. I have met several fine folk from this group...even a few good hammies. As alluded a few days ago, several feel the group ha actually improved lately..I have to agree....one merely needs to check the posting email addys of the disgruntled.....they ALL have changed..a few learned their lesson are behaving themselves now..I call that an improvement, as well. And as far as cb,,,yes, it is still very much usable and great fun, although I must admit AND thank several of those who have ,,uh..monitored those that..uh.....are in need of a bit of manners.

Then what are you waiting for, armchair attorney? Libel me or my business....LOL!
Something found on the web should not be construed as legal advice......odd thing is,,,what you found is already outdated and two additional rulings have been issued since then...LOL! Check ."electronic media law" then come back when you are educated..oh yea,,George libeled those businesses....a copy of his post and headers to his ISP form one of the businesses he defamed, along with a copy of what constitutes electronic libel and the LATEST ruling will more than likely have him slapped. Also, the Supreme Court has no merit concerning several state laws concerning libel..PA being one of them........you lose.

Merely pointing out your libel against businesses.

You are correct, it isnt libel when you speak the truth.

>they sell Illegal Amps as per there own web >sites.

Pay attention. When you are sued for libel, it has nothing to do with Riley or amps. YOU keep referring back to amps, George. I never claimed that was libel. The libel was you claiming those on your list were actively impeding on the amateur band. Your suppositions that their behavior MAY contribute to such acts doesn't cut it. You claimed they did it...that's libel...cut and dry....and possible defamation.

>Who is accusing them of anything on the >amateur bands get your head out of your ass.

You did. You accused those on your hate-list of "impeding on the amateur bands"

>Yes freebanders and regualr channel users >alike using amps causing >interference to me does impede on my legal >right to use the Amateur bands. Your >education for the day.

Tut tut..you did NOT qualify that,,you posted a list of legitimate businesses (unless PROVED otherwise ina court of law) and libeled them by claiming they COMMITTED the acts. You in no way said what they sell may contribute to such acts by others,,that wouldn't be libel...but the way you mismanaged it in your zest for smearing someone, is definite libel. You claimed THEY comitted the acts of impeding on amateur bands. Libel.
which is construed as a "means of retard

>the only retard

(snipped for your inability to communicate effectively without insult) >defending criminal types much to the chagrin >of many i am sure.

Who is a criminal? What business is a criminal? Can you name one? <g>
No, you can't.
You falsely and maliciously accused those businesses of positively committing acts that could cast doubt and raise questions about their credibility and character.

>There is nothing false about the >advertisements

(snipped for relevancy)

Not talking advertisements nor acts, althoguh you are desperately reaching for such. The issue is you libeled those businesses by flasely and maliciously accusing them of ACTS impeding the amateur band..not advertisements you may construe as an "act". As I said, if you were to be sued, a collection of your posts would have your public defender advising you to settle...immediately. The fact that you know nothing of such case laws does not negate the disposition of the court in following electronic media and copyright law held by the Supreme Court of your state and others..

>twsity except you Lets look at the tax returns

Once again, you fail to understand that your innuendo means nothing when you are the defendant, especially when you were so blatant in your broad accusations,,,your words mean nothing at all and you won't even have a chance to voice such concerns. A clear case is easily made that your entire presence has been to do nothing but smear, discredit, and attempt to defame those you do not like or agree with,,which is someothing else you have never learned to separate,,,personal like or dislike from a topic...once again, a compilation of your posting history would show any jury yout countless attempts and intentions at smearing, defaming, and discrediting woever you do not like or agree with...with these posts taken into consideration..I can almost guarantee you nothing you could say to a judge, jury, or arbitrator would convince them your posts concerning those businessses were any different than the thousands of other posts you made.

>hell lets subpoena all the shipping records, >lets take this to higher grounds.

You have no authority.

>I will do this pro se, I will stand up to the >dreaded amp makers of >america if they so dare.

Once again, your libel has nothing to do with what ones product may contribute to after it is sold. You libeled them, George.
The fact that you "feel" one may commit such accusations is a much different sceanrio than you outright accusing those as you just have. Once again, the fact that one you may "feel" committed violations based on the chosen cartoon internet name you "think" goes with a voice on the radio means nothing in a court of law.
>I don't feel

And yet again, your ignorance in interpreting the law as it pertains to you will be your greatest foe, should you be hauled to court for the libel you committed..
The fact that you openly libeled these businesses based on nothing more than your opinion of what cartoon name on the internet goes with what business is nothing more than innuendo that has resulted in you libeling several legitimate businesses.

(Snipped for your inabilty to remain on topic and becsuse your communication deficit has you hurling one liner insults) >go to all the web pages your stupid cartoon >ass persona will see the >same as I did when i type amps in a >GOOGLE search engine LOL.

Once again, your claim about amps I never took issue with. You libeled these businesses by claiming they actively committed acts that could be construed as unbecoming and it possibly is damaging to their livelihood, reputation, and character. What YOU think doesn't matter in the eyes of the law, George,,you are having one devil of a time comprehending that. Matter of fact, you haven't comprehended it at all. The amps are second nature to your libel concerning their actions..you can't seem to grasp that. Here's an analogy..if you were to say "Smith and Lesson" are unsavory of character for manufacturing guns, and break laws by selling guns"..you are guilty of libel, even if they WERE guilty of selling guns illegally, the fact that they were never caught, charged, or cited of breaking a law which you claim they were guilty of will have great bearing on the case. The fact that their guns end up in used in crimes has no bearing on your charges. the difference is INTENT. If the government can't produce a case of intent, you sure as hell can't. And if the government is ignoring many of what you refer to as lawbreakers, chances are it isn't ALL because of lack of funds, chances are it's because they can't make a case or refuse to try a case that falls in such a gray area of mundane matters. The fact remains, you libeled those businesse with INTENT to malign them, as you out and out accused them of actively committing misdeeds, which you can not prove. Yup, I'd sue your ass, if it was my business. It's the way things are done today and wisacres like you only chill when taken down a few pegs....with N8WWM, he clamored for attention until it came from an unwanted source....appears you are doing the same.

>Innuendo back by cold hard facts the TRUTH ?They are advertising the illegal activites

(snipped for you lack of self-control)

> They all are on the net as selling Illegal contra >band(cb >amps) and since you have Riley reading this >NG,

You have no facts that those you mentioned are impeding the amateur band. The fact that you erroneously construe and misinterpret their advertising as "impeding on the amateur band" is an afterthought. It has nothing to do with your accusation and libel. Not only are you without fact, merit, or a leg to stand on, but going by your claim, I guarantee you that you would be asked to produce evidence showing that those businesses you accused KNEW,,in other words, had knowledge and INTENT (there is that word again) that they were "impeding the amateur band" as you claimed. You can't do any of the baove,,,,,that makes it....LIBEL. Once again, I have Riley doing nothing.....attributing such great feats to me is no longer folly,,it's twisted.

>You said you have him reading this NG now. >frasso

Nope..that's NOT what I said. Go back and read it again..your interpretive skills already have you in a world of shit.

You're "lying" again.

>I helped him out by putting the names in one >place , sorta like a Links page.

What you did, is undeniable.

>It is in direct response to your claim Riley is >reading the NG

No matter. Blaming another for your actions is what we all expect from you. It's nothing new.
I'd actively persue action against you if it were my business. I'd love to hear your defense in a court of law for libel charges..

>I would love to hear the charges,

Libel.

>do it don't talk about it >well your honor he defamed my illegal >amplifier

What the plaintiff may or may not have done is not up to you to decide.
It isn't a factor of YOUR libel or of any lawsuit brought against you for such.

"But your honor..he breaks federal law..a cartoon name I THINK belongs to him ADMITTED to it on usenet.

>No cartoon

No cartoon? Who am "I" then......you say I admit to breaking federal law,,,who am I of not a name of my choosing that you know by? LOL!

(Snipped for inability to communicate effectively and without insult)

>Your honor just go to the web page and order >an amp I gave you the contact info

Not talking about amps...again, it's not a factor in your libelous statement that these legitimate businesses "impeded on the amater bands."
++++++++++++++++++++++++=

>Lets see the tax returnsLOL bwaahahhaha >your funny as hell

Once again,,you begging about another subject can not be raised in court where you are the defendant for libel. You can't even question items such as their tax returns...LOL!
The nature of the business is irrelevant

>you didnt seem to think so in your previous >post.

Pointing to others behavior will not save your own ass should one of these businesses sue your libelous carcass. Case closed.

..and the irony is humorous that you can not comprehend that.

>The irony is I am talking to a cartoon character

NOW you're learning...and most here thought you couldn't be

N8WWM guilty of FCC violations. According to the FCC, N8WWM, Dog Adair committed several violations over the air at the expense of the Toledo Amateur Radio Club by utilizing their repeater to break the law. The amateur club received a warning letter from the FCC concerning Adair's violations and were told to take steps to make certain the violations by Adair will not be repeated. Adair not only hurt the entire image of amateur radio with his inexcusable behavior, but damaged the reputation of yet another entity trying to further the good of amateur radio. It's a shame when bad apples like these make it so clubs can't even trust their own users to abide by the rules they were sworn to uphold. Adair is also an infamous presence on the internet. A google search of "N8WWM" reveals a peek into the world of the individual identified as Adair. In addition to FCC violations, Adair has, in the past, been accused of being a prolific spammer, breaking several internet laws and violating several terms of service agreements with internet providers.

Riley is reading this NG... Hey Riley How is it going my man.. :wink wink: I got a collection of websites you may want to take a look, whilest your browsing the web, ps: you may want to thank twisty he let me know you were coming to the group so i got this info ready, it is a collection of dealers and maker of amps that are ruining the CB band and also impeding on the amateur bands. If your serious about your job you will start worrying about amateur bands and the CB band instead of reading this NG. Oh btw, the guy twistedhed is an admitted violator of the amplifer rule and violates the current CB frequency allocation he regularly appears on the so called "freeband" admittedly so and tape recorder by members of our audiance. Now I know this won't make me popular with the boys in CB but the work of a Radio Super Hero is not a easy task. I have some more names in a seperate dossier I will be emailing them to you.

Thanks for the e-mail Jimmy. Another person on this newsgroup would try to make you believe that I've said the opposite of what you and others have said. I agree with what you have to say.

I do take exception with loosing the capacitance hat though. I would appreciate it if you could point me in the direction that would back up your claim. There is very little information available about the advantages of a capacitance hat. There are reasons why Mosley, Hy-Gain, and Jay use it and get better results because of it. I would like to learn more about them! The ARRL antenna books and such talk about the loading characteristics only.

One point I've tried to make over and over is that the main radiator, which is 5/8 wave length, is what makes the antenna a 5/8. We know that the antenna must be taken to the next resonant point which is 3/4 wave length. This additional 1/8 wave can be made up in many different ways. But, we do NOT want this coil/loop/etc to change the length of the 5/8 radiator.

Also, Jay's testing showed that moving the 5/8 element UP and away from the ground plane LOWERED the losses at the feed point! Less loss at the feed point means more signal to the 5/8 radiator. This would equate to higher field strength readings...WHICH IS WHAT REAL TEST NUMBERS SHOWN.

This antenna is much more than a plot on a computer screen! It was modeled, BUILT, AND TESTED. Your smart antenna builders will tell you that you can't take "models" for face value. Once you model it, you need to build it and test it.

One thing to note, and I would suggest that people really look at this, is that there are TWO trombones for tuning on Jay's antenna! Once the antenna is built per the instructions (which include formulas to put the antenna on any frequency from 24MHz-30MHz), you tune the first trombone for lowest SWR. If you have a complex metering device that also measures IMPEDANCE, you tune the SECOND trombone until you get 50 ohms.

You can go back and forth, but experience in setting up this antenna says that any additional tuning is unnecessary.

Also remember, that the length of the 5/8 element is affected by the diameters of the STEPPED ELEMENTS. The addition of the "hat" lowers atmospheric noises. Tests run by me with and without the hat does support this...although I can't explain why.

I argued with Jay for years that the Sigma 5/8 was a better antenna than the Super Penetrator. The Sigma does NOT use a "hat". I still believe the Sigma 5/8 is better though ;-) Mosley and Hy-gain beg to differ and I feel safe in saying that they know WAY MORE about antennas than I do!

As I've said above, test numbers show that Jay's antenna is electrically superior to any commercial made 5/8 CB antenna that came before it. You should really check one out if you get the chance! His antennas work so well that commerical organizations are using his products!

I'm glad at least nobody disputed the mechanical prowess of his design.

Thanks again Jimmy for the well thought out and informative post. It sure is a whole lot better than the whinning, uninformative, childish posts from George.

Who says Riley is wasting time reading a CB newsgroup? And who's to say that he hasn't been here for a while? One can also speculate that many of us "pro-legal" types could have been feeding him information for quite some time. These possibilities have little bearing on the point I am trying to make. Afterall, what happens on this newsgroup, and what occurs on the air, are 2 different things.

You really need to stop speaking for this supposed "majority". To date, very few people have affirmed any synnergy with you.

The phrase "..to contend with" is now synonymous with "causing problems"? My, how you read hidden meanings into words.

I took "..to contend with" to mean that there will be others defending the rule of law.

Nowhere did he mention anything about any "methods", only the general principle of the debate.

So are you implying here that Doug was "railroaded"? Are you also implying that what he was allegedly "cited" for, is, in fact, a trumped up charge, made only in response to his dealings on this newsgroup?
That's a pretty bold statement. And by what authority do you speak when you make claims about what laws hams supposedly break, and which they are willing to overlook?

Much of that has to do with you adopting a more friendly and less abrasive posture. You've even said nice things to George. A few have commented to me about this sudden shift in your attitude.

What Doug does, in no way reflects or represents what I do, here or on the air. I still support the rule of law, and I still hold in contempt those who flaunt their illegality , and tread all over the rights of other people. I have nothing to hide, therefore I have nothing to fear.

There is no "akc". Haven't you been listening?

Defying the rule of law, and thumbing you nose at your responsibility to society, is considered anti-social behavior. Don't take my word for it, look it up. I've provided several links documenting this behavior in the past. Selectively ignoring laws you don't agree with is also anarchistic. I don't make up these definitions. I only pointed out how your behavior fits them. Don't get mad at me if you don't like the picture that you've painted for yourself.

And yes, I DID run an illegal CB station. I was as much a federal criminal as you are. I also cared little about what other people thought, outside of our own little group of friends. We did what we had to do to get out and be heard. We had a rip-roaring good time. We acted like the adolescents that we were. I also drank before I was 21, and did other things that I knew I'd get away with. But that was a long time ago. People can reform. Some call it wisdom, others call it maturity.
Some just call it old age.

I don't have a problem personally with those who freeband, as long as they are not interfering with other people. But that does not change the fact that it is ILLEGAL, and subject to criminal proceedings. That's not my call, that's the FCC's. I'm simply pointing it out, to those who seem to have either forgotten it, or who refuse to accept it. Freeband at your own risk. But don't cry foul if or when you're finally caught.

> You went the extra effort and called names and attacked

Depending on what you're doing and for what motivation, determines whether or not you are truly anti-social, or just a bit misguided.

So, you believe that hams should condone illegal radio activity, or at the very least, just look the other way and pretend it doesn't happen?

You've got it all wrong. Ham radio is about teaching the PROPER way to do things. One of those things is respect and adherence to the rules.

So you're here to catagorically deny that as our society becomes more "morally bankrupt", and as our attitudes change, and what is considered socially acceptable, or not, that these changes will not be reflected in the operating habits and styles of radio operators? Are radio operators separate from the rest of society? Are they not living (at least some of the time) in the real world? Will these new attitudes not be carried onto the airwaves for everyone to hear? You'd have to be pretty naive to not see it.

> .no one believs the "criminal" tag you place upon dxers and freebanders.

The fact that those who are guilty of it, are uncomfortable with the label, in no way diminishes its validity. Take it up with the FCC.

>..and everyone has seen you come unglued when your own behavior is questioned.

Unglued? In what way?

Sure, considering that YOU are always trying to deflect the topic away

Once again you view a different interpretation of a statement as a "lie". You cannot seem to differentiate the difference between a difference in interpretation, and an intentional fabrication, I can see.
Aaron made a comment, that you took totally out of context, and added meanings that were not there. Aaron never said that there was an organized "group", or that the group was "causing trouble", or anything else that you have implied. But I am the one "lying" for stating what should have been obvious, if you weren't busy looking for hidden meanings and agendas.

I started talking on the CB back in the 70's. It was a lot of fun! I remember guys in the club getting in trouble with the FCC for running power or talking out of band.

One group, the "LF GROUP" talked on 26.945 LSB. They were a respectable bunch of guys and other than operating out of band we probably the best operators I knew. Some were hams.

Another group was the "Yankee International Sidebanders Club" who operated on 27.355 LSB. This was BEFORE 40 channels was authorized. Many of them were hams too! I could only wish that I could have a Kenwood 930 for my base radio back then!

Not being a ham myself, I couldn't understand WHY they would want to talk on CB when they had the rest of the world to talk to. Their answer, CB IS FUN!

Many ham radio operators are (for lack of a better word) UPTIGHT. The discussions are dull and there are some SERIOUS attitude problems with a superiority complex!

Radio is radio and people who enjoy talking on radio do so from ham, to CB, to MURS, to FRS, to GMRS!

Just because you are a ham doesn't mean you have to hate CB or any other non-ham band.

I know hams who talk on CB and really enjoy it! I know hams who talk on MURS and really enjoy it!

Every band offers something different to the operator. Don't blast a ham because he talks on the CB...and don't blast a CB'er because he isn't a ham radio operator.

Be respectful of eachother and help educate those who want to learn. I myself am always loking for a good education! I certainly don't know it all! While I'm very versed in antennas and feedlines, I couldn't even enter a conversation about amplifiers, bias circuits, radio tweaking, etc.

Don't be a jerk to one another!

Also, Twisty said it in another post, this group is beginning to have some good conversations and posts. There are some smart people out here who want to help their fellow radio operator. Keep it up!

I guess you will always have jerks who fell it necessary to post crap about everthing you have to say. Just try to ignore them. AND, don't blame the ham community as a whole for these jerks just as you don't want to blame the CB community as a whole for their fair share of jerks. Both services have a bunch of good people in them!

Can HAMS enjoy CB? You bet! Will current CB radio operators become HAMS? I would think so! If you enjoy radio, there are plenty of services available to everyone!

BTW, we've been having a lot of fun on MURS in the LA area! Most activity is on 151.820mhz. Right now it is mostly hams with their 2 meter radios. But a good number of us are using the Radio Shack 19-1210 radio. This radio is discontinued but can be had for $49.95! There is also the Radio Shack BTX-127 which is a handheld radio! I would HIGHLY suggest people take a good look at MURS. Do a search on Google for "MURS". Its FM at VHF frequencies and a whole lot of fun!

3953. eBay removes legal 10m ham gear but allows illegal CB equipment

I've noticed something interesting on eBay lately: selective enforcement and removal of legitimate gear.

Several 10-meter radios have been removed from the site, prior to the close of the auction. HR2600s, HR2510s, RCIs, etc. I'm talking about radios which are advertised as NON-MODIFIED, for amateur use only, and are being sold in the "Ham Radio: Transceivers" category. As such, there is nothing illegal about these radios.

On the other hand, I have witnessed several radios which were advertised as being modified, listed in the CB section, reference to "upper and lower channels", "can be used with kickers", etc. These radios clearly ARE illegal, as is their intended use on the CB band. Yet, these auctions are allowed to proceed. Here are a few current examples:

http://cgi.ebay.com/ws/eBayISAPI.dll?ViewItem&item=3008370255&category=1501

http://cgi.ebay.com/ws/eBayISAPI.dll?ViewItem&item=3008183762&category=1501

Seems to me that eBay is opening themselves up for legal action here. Allowing illegal CB equipment while not allowing similar, legal amateur radio transceivers.

Your thoughts?

Yes they do. I believe, however, they are required to be consistent with their guidelines. Cancelling some auctions while allowing other, identical items to be sold on their site is tantamount to discrimination and selective enforcement.

Also, it should be noted that, as per eBay's written policies, amateur radio equipment IS allowed on the site. "10-meter transceivers" are specifically mentioned as being permitted.

Legal action? Come down from out of your gum ball tree and catnip!

75% of the time that e-Bay has pulled Ham/CB/Radio auctions it is for numerous complaints against the Sellers for not shipping earlier auction products won, non-payment of fees or fraud.

E-bay does not think ham radio as some type of a special group worthy of merited special attention - apart from the fact that ham and CB related equipment sales usually are in the top-5 categories for complaints of Seller fraud filed to e-Bay from buyers.

Bottom line: When you bid on anything on E-Bay be DAMM SURE your Seller is on the level and IS NOT one of these (former) "traveling hamfest bum gypsies" we used to see set up in the flea market at all the hamfests trying to pass off the same overpriced non-working junk to suckers or newbies. Many of em have abandoned the "Hamfest Flea Market Circuit" and now sell exclusively on e-Bay

The above 2 auctions contain item types that I have seen for sale at NUMEROUS hamfests in the past - and that INCLUDED the DAYTON HAMVENTION. What's the difference selling this stuff at Dayton....or on e-Bay ??

(none if you ask me - but I sure will not be the first one to place my bid on saidsame items - JUST IGNORE THEM AND THEIR SALE SIMPLE EH ? How difficult is that to do..???)

Yup, and some of us can say without doubt that you have indeed..N8 cc'ed consider too much.

Which is what you have been taught all along...but that doesn't stop you from claiming someone like me freebands and breaks the law every day even though you are not witness to it..the same goes for everyone else you refer to concerning amp use. That just doesn't jibe with your claim "that radio is a reflection of society."

The only "muddying" done, has been to yourself, BY yourself, with self-conradicting posts..you know..you DO support freeband, to escape CERTAIN hash and trash, then you support an amp as long as it isn't TOO much, then you DON'T support such behavior and call those who do such things "criminals", then the next week you post again in support of a "little power" as long as it isn't too much, as defined by you. Hoo-Boy!

Pretty plain, cut and dry what ya' said there, Dave. AS we can see by Voob's post, whom you fought and lobbied for credibilty as a real person for many times, he, along with N8, clearly defined the AKC's purpose
many times..and lo and behold,,,there is your name on HIS list, HIS words telling us who we need "contend" with should he leave. Once again, asking the group to believe what you tell us instead of what we see, continues to illustrate your nature. To outright lie and and to attempt to place the blame upon ME for placing you in the company of the AKC illustrates perfectly your limitations and malice.

No,,I don't.....you need to get over the notion that you somehow

To date, I have made contact with many members from this group and talk

On a related note, I truly believe if N8 didn't do the things he did on the internet and on the air, he wouldn't have had any problems, as the majority of hammies break laws they swear to uphold and obey, even if it is failure to ID on time..but no one takes them to task for it

You're self-contradicting, again. You claimed what takes place on this board is very different from what takes place on the air. You also claimed what takes place on the air is a reflection of society. If that wasn't enough ornitholgical diet for ya'...if what takes place on these boards has no merit concerning what takes place on the air, as you have ALSO stated, then you are libeling the hell out of me by referring to me as a federal criminal. Well, maybe not me, as my copyright expired on my cartoon name.,Anyone else in here that has used their real name, and you have accused of being a federal criminal because you "think" that person uses or used a certain cartoon name that you again "think" belongs to a proper real name that you "think" broke the law because the cartoon name "admitted" it on usenet.......well, all I can say, Davey, is that if the federal government, all law enforcement officers, and all other courts

under the United States Judicial System do NOT consider these folks "Federal Criminals"..you could be in a world of shit....may even have to sell that boat of yours to pay some legal costs. I'd start paying attention to exactly who you refer to as federal criminals...maybe educate yourelf on what constitutes libel and "federal criminal" status,,,not what you or your armchair lawyers WISH it to be, or you're flawed interpretations.

I must ask,,,who might you have in mind as "forgetting" it?
And for one who chooses to "refuse" to accept it, an opinion must have been formed by one for you to arrive at such a profound position......where was it? Again, not one person has taken issue with the fact it is illegal..not one, Davey. I must admit, I'm slightly amused by the mirage of the image <g> of you setting forth the notion that even if one WERE to refuse or accept it, that the duty is yours to somehow make them believe otherwise. Your inhibitions have always been imposing your unwanted will and views on others you feel not capable of doing it themselves. Now THAT is undeniable typical liberal behavior.

No need to take it up with the FCC,,,but one day someone may take it up with you if they decidedly have had enough of your false libel of not "accusing" them of being a federal criminal, but of coming right out and stating it. Not that is a great answer the thicker the beetr . LOL I guess thats what you get from a asshole...

JD go with 8 or 10 gauge and use the shortest length cable to the ground rod! Otherwise it looses it's effectivness. Station ground and lightning protection are 2 seperate things.

The largest and the shortest ground wire you can handle is the right answer. Actually, a FLAT BRAID is better than a 10 guage or 8 guage wire. Wire is better than nothing. You can also buy flat copper strips (about 3" wide).

The big thing is to NOT run different length wires to a ground rod! Run all of your equipment to one junction and then a wire to the ground rod. This will help eliminate GROUND LOOPS.

I bought a 2' piece of 1/2 copper pipe and a bag of plastic holders. You can find these in the plumbing section at Home Depot.

I mounted this pipe to the back of my desk and my equipment has a short run of flat braid running to the pipe. There is a LARGER braid running to the 3/4" copper ground rod (found at Lowes). You can find the braid at NAPA.

gentlemen.....i agree with everything you all have stated.......however, i must point out that it was not one person, i say again, not one person, from this newsgroup,......that went to the ham radio newsgroups and starting harassing them about illegalities.....these anti types descended on this newsgroup and i submit to you, that it was these guys that totally messed up this newsgroup.....and i also say that it was their intention to cause as much hate and discontent that they could before they got bored with it or whatever.....and all of these folks were as it turned out hams.....so what can you say about that??? it does not speak highly of their hobby.....i myself have talked to hams many times and for the most part they are nice people who could care less what goes on on the 11 meter band.....but some of them definitely have a bug up their ass, especially when you ask what they perceive to be the wrong questions....to wit, questions about amps.....hell boys we are all grown ups here, ...what the hell.....let your hair down and enjoy...

I'll second the 'braid" suggestion! Make a nice "buss", and connect the gear to that that. Use 2" braid from that to a good 8' ground rod. Good luck.

True Dino, flat braided offers a lower impedance to ground. The person had asked about wire and moped made the comment on wire that is why I didn't offer it as an alternative. Some old coax braid from rg-8 will be cheap and work fine for a station ground, as noted lightning ground would benefit from copper flashing.

Run all your equipment to a ground buss bar, the nfrom ther run the shortest possible length to the ground rod.

That is a good easy idea for a ground buss for equipment. I don't think larger braid will help any more than rg-8 coax braid.

TWISTY COULD BE PROSECUTED FOR PRACTICING LAW WITHOUT A LICENSE

Date: Wed, 19 Feb 2003 12:31:43 -0500 (EST)
From: twistedhed@webtv.net (Twistedhed)
Newsgroups: rec.radio.cb
Twistedhed wrote:
Besides telling others what to do, that is exactly what you will be directed to do concerning the false charges you made against legitimate businesses (unless proven otherwise in a courth of law) if any of them choose to persue action against you. It is up to you to prove these businesses have "impeded" the amateur band in any manner, should they decide your libel cost them sales, service, or damage to their reputation.
Besides, after your entire collection of internet posts were assembled, your attorney would advise you to settle immediately..

The State Attorney of Florida has the power to bring criminal charges against an individual for practicing law without a license.

WHO REGULATES THE CONDUCT OF NONLAWYERS WHEN THEY ARE ACTING LIKE LAWYERS?

The Constitution of the State of Florida gives the Supreme Court of Florida the power to regulate the conduct of attorneys. Through this constitutional grant of authority, the Supreme Court of Florida has the inherent authority to regulate and prevent the practice of law by individuals who are not licensed to practice law in Florida. The court created The Florida Bar
and requires all lawyers to be members of that organization which funds the total cost of the lawyer discipline system and the unlicensed practice of law system. The Florida Bar acts as prosecutor in unlicensed practice of law cases, much like the state attorney's office does in criminal cases. Unlicensed Practice of Law (UPL) committees, of which one-third of the members are not lawyers, investigate instances of unlicensed practice of law and report their findings to a statewide Standing Committee on Unlicensed Practice of Law. Florida Bar prosecutions are filed with the Supreme Court of Florida and trials are held before judges, called referees, appointed by the court. Engaging in the unlicensed practice of law in Florida is also a crime. It is a first degree misdemeanor.

For this reason, the State Attorney also has the power to bring criminal charges against an individual for practicing law without a license.

WHAT IS THE PURPOSE OF THE INVESTIGATION AND PROSECUTION OF THE UNLICENSED PRACTICE OF LAW?

The purpose of The Florida Bar unlicensed practice of law system is to protect the public. The Supreme Court of Florida can prevent an individual from continuing to engage in the unlicensed practice of law by issuing a civil injunction. UPL committees can also get the individual to agree to stop practicing law by having them sign a cease and desist affidavit. The Florida Bar, as a prosecutorial agency, does not and cannot give individual legal service or advice to any person making allegations. Nor can The Florida Bar assist you in getting your money back. Any loss you may have sustained as a result of the conduct of the nonlawyer cannot be recovered through a Bar unlicensed practice of law proceeding. (If the State Attorney brings criminal charges, the criminal court may require restitution as part of the penalty or probation.) If you have suffered a financial or property loss, your rights must be enforced by the usual legal methods against the person responsible for the loss. In addition, The Florida Bar has no authority to review a court decision on a particular matter and the Bar's UPL system should never be used as a substitute for an appeal of such cases.

WHERE DO I FILE A COMPLAINT?

You may make allegations regarding the unlicensed practice of law by contacting The Florida Bar's UPL offices in your area. The addresses are listed at the end of this brochure.

Your complaint must be in writing, preferably on a Bar form. If a Bar form is not used, the following language must appear before your signature: "Under penalty of perjury, I declare that I have read the foregoing document and that to the best of my knowledge and belief the facts stated in it are true."

When filing a complaint, tell the Bar your name, address and phone number as well as the name, address and phone number of the nonlawyer if you have that information. Then try to set forth the facts on which your allegations are based. Attach copies of any court papers, documents, letters or other materials that pertain to your allegations when you write the Bar office. Please do not send the original documents.

WHAT HAPPENS AFTER I FILE A COMPLAINT?

All matters received by The Florida Bar are reviewed by Bar UPL Counsel to determine if The Florida Bar has jurisdiction to investigate the allegations. If The Florida Bar has jurisdiction, the inquiry is considered as a complaint. The complaint may be referred to a local circuit committee for investigation or may be investigated by UPL Counsel. The committee will be located in the circuit where the accused resides or does business or where the alleged conduct took place.

WILL THE NONLAWYER KNOW ABOUT MY COMPLAINT?

Probably. The nonlawyer may be sent a copy of your complaint during the course of the investigation.

Additionally, if the nonlawyer asks who complained, your name will be given. Anonymity will only be granted in extreme circumstances and should be discussed with one of the UPL attorneys before filing a complaint.

WHAT WILL IT COST ME?

No cost or fee is charged for filing an inquiry against a nonlawyer. All members of The Florida Bar are required to pay dues which cover the cost of the unlicensed practice of law program. You may, however, be required to devote some of your time to attending UPL committee hearings and testifying at trial.
Unlicensed practice of law committee members all donate their time as a voluntary public service and all other costs are paid by The Florida Bar. When the Supreme Court of Florida issues an injunction, the nonlawyer may be ordered to pay the costs involved.

WHAT IS A UPL COMMITTEE?

UPL committees of The Florida Bar are made up of volunteer members in your community, at least one-third of whom are nonlawyers. Each of Florida's 20 judicial circuits have at least one such committee.
The local UPL committee investigates complaints and decides whether the evidence shows that an individual practiced law without a license.
The UPL committee may decide whether a trial before a judge is necessary and may make that decision with or without a hearing on your complaint. If the individual involved is present before the UPL committee, you may be given the opportunity to be there.

WHAT KINDS OF ACTIONS CAN BE TAKEN AGAINST THE NONLAWYER?

If the local UPL committee determines that the conduct does not involve the unlicensed practice of law, that it is an isolated incident which will not be repeated and will not result in a likelihood of future public harm, that the individual is no longer in Florida or that the complaining party does not wish to cooperate with the investigation, the local UPL committee may close the case.
If the local UPL committee determines that the individual did engage in the unlicensed practice of law and that the activity is likely to continue, the committee may request that the individual sign a cease and desist affidavit. Although the nonlawyer does not have to acknowledge that the nonlawyer engaged in the conduct in the affidavit, the nonlawyer will acknowledge that the conduct is the unlicensed practice of law and will agree to refrain from engaging in the conduct in the future.

If the conduct involves the unlicensed practice of law and the individual will not sign a cease and desist affidavit, the local UPL committee can recommend prosecution. Prosecution is before the Supreme Court of Florida and seeks a civil injunction which orders the nonlawyer to stop engaging in UPL. The Bar can also bring an action before the Supreme Court of Florida for indirect criminal contempt.

I guess that what happens when you don't machine the parts. Make them on the

4009. Emergency LSB Repeater on 3.990 MHZ in ARRL Video

I downloaded the brand new ARRL ham video Amateur Radio Today from www.arrl.org today and found it very interesting just 30 seconds in. Walter Cronkite (he's the narrator) turns up the volume on a what looks like a Yaesu FT-817 ham radio set to listen to what he says are "two average guys." They seem to be talking in a fire emergency on 3.990 LSB according to the radio's front panel. But whats strange is that they sound like they're on an FM repeater.

Even stranger is that the rig's S-meter doesn't fluctuate with voice peaks, nor does it drop down between transmissions. There is also a "channel 9 rodger beep" following each of their transmissions.

Queston. Does anyone know if the hams have an LSB repeater on 3.990? Or maybe the rig was in "Dual Watch" mode where the display was not showing the active VFO. Or was it all done on channel 9? I've never used an FT-817 and I am very confused.

An oh yeh. I found out that Walter Cronkite is really a ham operator. His ham call is KB2GSD

'if money weren't a problem' there is another type of grounding system put out by erico that uses chemicals (generally salt based) for those of us that have crappy soil conditions. we use it because our telecomm equipment is extremely sensitive (xmitting at 10 gb/s). the lightning protection system as mentioned should be isolated. 4-5 meters between points works in sandy soil, closer i would assume with denser material.

How big is the lot ? How deep is snow? What's in the way? btw, a 10' box on the Cat doesn't hurt either.
But snow removal is a costly process, business's must determine is the loss of revenue worth the Cash outlay.

6061 This heat treatable alloy provides very good corrosion resistance. It takes finishing very well. Easily welded, 6061 is about as strong as mild steel, making it a widely used general purpose alloy. It is easy to machine and, when annealed, it is very workable, retaining its qualities if it is heat treated without aging. End uses of this alloy include aircraft landing mats, marine vessels, structural and architectural components, storage tanks, highway signs and many components in transportation equipment.
6063 This heat treatable was developed for the extrusion industry.
It is the most important alloy in the magnesium silicide group. Its finish, when extruded, is very good, making the alloy attractive for uses where the lack of a requirement for finishing provides an advantage. It is favored by architects because it can be extruded into shapes that are very intricate.
It is also used in furniture and the manufacture of ladders.

No, I don't think it's mostly HAMs causing trouble.. I think it's mostly everyone who posts anything to stir the shit.

HAMs, CBers, Freebanders, etc, etc, etc... all are guilty of it..

home depot sells the grounding rod. if your house is older be aware that a lot of contractors backfilled the foundation with debris so placing the rod 4-6 feet from the foundation may be a good idea. 73, jim kp920

That is a common mythperception with CB radio....

Suppose that your ground wire has an inductance of 1 uHy. At 550 kHz it will have a reactance of just 3.5 ohms, which is fine for the AM broadcast band, but at 27 MHz it will be 170 ohms (remember your transmission line is only 50 ohms!). The problem is made even more complicated as your ground wire approaches 1/4 wavelength (and odd multiples) because the "ground" will be practically useless. If you are running power then expect burnt lips and loads of RFI.

If you are going to RF-ground your shack you must tune the ground just like an antenna. As an alternative you can run many wires of different lengths from the central grounding junction in the shack to the ground rod. I have done both and the second method is easier. Also, you can create a kind of 'artificial ground' by loading up the shack end of your coax with ferrite beads, which also works well.

You can test your ground with an impedance bridge or a GDO. With a good ground the impedance bridge will measure low impedance and the GDO will bottom out.

This is highly unlikely on Usenet. The burden of proof rests with the person being libeled. Anyone can sign any name in a Usenet posting. Even if you prove that a post came from a certain computer via an IP address, you still have to prove that that person made the posting. The only way of defending would be to build a case against the poster if libelous postings continue. IOW, N8WWN should be patient and give the poster enough rope to hang themselves with

Includes original box & manual.
This is a variable power amp.
It has 6 Power Settings / Modulation Boost, High Linearity & Very Low Distortion.
Works on the following modes:
AM/FM Rated at 170 Watts Max.
SSB/CW Rated at 350 Watts Max.
Freq. Range: H.F. 26-30 MHz
Input Power 0.5 to 10 Watts.
This is a very clean cool running mobile amp.
This is a great amp, just make sure you connect it directly to the battery of your vehicle, for optimum performance. This sucker drains allot of power!!!

USED
Unit has minor wear & tear, nothing outstanding.
Unit is in 100% working condition.
I have personally used this unit & it has registered 400 Watts PEP, on my meter!

Definition of the SuperBowl
If 10,000 CB'er's are on the SuperBowl
then only 1000 can be heard some of the times
& only 100 can be heard most of the times
& only 10 can be heard all the time
This is a great example why the bowl is not for the weak!

Dave,
No, there are no voice repeaters on 80 meters. It's a 'show-biz' thing, a "It's okay to lie if you sell the product!" kind of thing. Very misleading and typical

I'm not talking about punishing other people's children. But as parents, we have the responsibility to punish our own when they misbehave. Just as we have a responsibilty, as civilized world leaders, to punish those who step out of line, and commit acts that are generally unacceptable in a civilized society.

Like anything else the news media reports on concerning with technology, they are quite aware that the average Joe, wouldn't know LSB, from FM, a repeater from simplex, or ham radio from CB. They show pictures of a few fancy ham radios, and supply audio, from some other source, and unless you are "into" the technology, you wouldn't know the difference. They were probably piping in the audio from a public service band while showing pictures of ham radios.

That fact that this "production" was done as a promotion for people interested in ham radio, the content is somewhat misleading and a bit insulting.

Damn it Dino! Now you had to go on that trip down memory lane. Now I'm sitting here waxing nostalgic about all the fun I had then too. They were fun times.

I've often pondered what it would've been like to have the type of equipment I have now, back then. The reluctant answer that I have is that at first, it would be fun to be king of the band, but alot of the fun, back then, was in trying to bang together a decent station, with modest cash (We had no choice), by using your brains to build and modify. Tape recorder microphones, stitched into pre-amp kits, feeding a 1.5 watt walkie talkie, driving a 2 tube amplifier, into a home made groundplane antenna, made out of car radio antennas, and scrap aluminum. THAT was a station!

> Not being a ham myself, I couldn't understand WHY they would want to talk on > superiority complex!

Yes! It was LOADS of fun.

That was very true until fairly recently. That was one of the main reasons that I delayed getting my ham license until the 80's. CB was the place to be, when you wanted to play a game of chess over the air, or act out a scene from Star wars, or make a radio parody of a local CB personality. You could also count on the local group to be impulsive and spontanious. Many impromptu "road trips" were made just to try the next big sandwich idea at McDonalds in a distant town, or an all night bowling party.

> Radio is radio and people who enjoy talking on radio do so from ham, to CB, to Each of those bands have their unique uses and users. I've been disappointed in FRS, as most people use them between their own families, and actually have a fit when others try to break in, even to say "hi".

GMRS users, are those who actually used CB for it's legally intended purpose, and got driven off by the overwhelming hobby use. So they don't take kindly to any sign of "hobby" use there.

MURS holds promise. Although the only stations I hear there seem to be holdovers from business allocations. I've not heard any hobbyists there yet.

> Just because you are a ham doesn't mean you have to hate CB or any other > non-ham band.

I really think the perception that hams "hate" CB is greatly overstated and exaggerated. It may be true that many hams do not like certain types of CBers, or condone their attitudes. But very few actually "hate" the band.

> I know hams who talk on CB and really enjoy it! I know hams who talk on MURS

Sure! I used CB long after I got my ticket. There's no rule that says that you have to give one up, when you move to another.

Damn! I'm envious. I've been itching to see what develops on MURS. But like I said before, in my area, it's almost nothing. We have our share of kids overrunning FRS, but little on MURS, except occasional business users. I hope that changes....

Ridiculous and shown the opposite. There are many, MANY here who have ignored their bullshit and it does it die? Does it? A most recent example is Jay's antenna..he explained to the best of his ability the inquiries one of these "non-hammies who holds a license" that you refer,
and the poor bastard that was trying to rattle him eventually was ignored, and as recent as today he is still trying to elicit comments from Jay concerning his antenna. Null.....and void...it didn't die.

Sounds like they showed the HF rig while playing the audio from a 2 meter radio. Instead of a "roger beep," it was probably a repeater's courtesy tone (which lets operators know that the repeater's timeout function has been reset).

It was probably done for the general public instead of regular hams, who would be able to spot the difference. But the general public doesn't know the difference between HF and VHF. It was probably done more for the convenience of producing the video than for technical accuracy.

Let's start here...

The anti thing was made up of people who happen to have amateur radio licenses.. These people aren't HAMs. They don't act like HAMs, and they don't think like HAMs.

That's nice.. It's also still illegal, but hey, No Cop No Stop, right?
As for Aaron (dwight, or whoever he was), Doug, Chuckie, et al, they don't represent what a HAM really is, and in this particular medium, they're not HAMs anyway, they're Netizens, and bad ones at that.

The fact of the matter is, regardless of what the Anti's did, you, twist, mopar, and even myself are responsible for perpetuating it..

Blaming HAM radio for rec.radio.cb's woes is like blaming CB radio for the intrusion of the freebanders into the 10 and 12 meter bands. The Anti's (most of them) happened to have an Amateur callsign.. They sure didn't act like HAMs, and if you ask most of the real HAM community, they'd probably agree with me.

So put that in your pipe and cut the cheese.

I beg to differ. It was never really established that Mark Fuller was a ham, or that Aaron Voobner was one either. Therefore, it is irresponsible, and also inaccurate, to identify those who speak out against illegal CB activity, as "Ham controlled" or "ham inspired".

It makes sense that since hams, for the most part, have a greater respect for the FCC, and for the rules of the service, that they would be more likely to side with those who support the rules. But to catergorize and generalize these efforts as "causing trouble", when the

the true troublemakers can be identified as one or two individuals, is also highly irresponsible.

You have no proof that Aaron is Dwight Stewart. Stating it, as if you do, only makes you look foolish, especially considering that the real Aaron is probably laughing at you. And why would he go to Europe?

Such a straightforward and simple concept. It's a shame that you can't apply that same logic to the quack in Iraq, and maybe you'd understand why we need to shut him down, and stop denouncing the efforts of those who wish to do just that.

Funny, I find the "in your face" defiance of the rules, to be pompous, as well as arrogant and self serving. Your earlier assertions that we somehow have the "right" to ignore the law smacks of self-righteousness as well. I guess it depends on your perspective.

Really? What's Aaron's call? Sparky's? Mark Fuller's?

And for the record, we didn't start any trouble. The trouble started the first time one of you cranked the power up over 4 watts, and/or cross connected your PLLs to a channel outside the 40 channel band.

Unlike you, who sees meanings where none have been displayed, I see a fairly obvious implication in what you stated above. What else is one to infer from the statement "I truly believe if N8 didn't do the things he did on the internet and on the air, he wouldn't have had any problems" ???

Who has noted this? No one on this newsgroup has stated any such thing.
Your immaginary friends do not count.

I have never "unconditionally" defended Doug, or his actions. To date, the only "defense" that I have offered, was not to jump to conclusions, and to wait for the evidence to solidify, before planning any parties.

Which means what exactly? That someone can change their "name" to AKC?
You still can't tie that name to any group of people on here.

You were the only one to mention my name in the same sentance as the word "akc". The message from Aaron, that you're so fond of referencing, has no such comparison. So who's nose is rubbing in it now?

Such as? Another unsubstantiated claim? Quite the endevour for someone

The FCC is a federal authority. Breaking the rules is a federal violation. Those cited have their cases heard in a federal court. People convicted of these infractions are federal criminals. The only difference between them and you is that you haven't been caught yet.
Semantics.

What a load on nonsense. There are no "cartoon characters". What someone says they do on the air, as relayed on this group, unless they are LYING, accurately desribes their activities. If someone says that they break FCC rules, then they are acting in a criminal manner, as defined by the FCC.

Cut the crap and get to the point. A newsgroup has little libel protection, simply due to the inability to positively identify anyone. All the years of USENET, and all the knock down, drag out flame wars, you would think there would be many successful libel cases. But guess what? they are few and far between. For one thing, in order to prove libel, you have to prove that your reputation was damaged, by what was stated. That would then imply that you have a reputation to be damaged. Since you are not a public figure, and you hide behind an anonymous name, I can call you every name in the book, should I desire to, and you don't have a legal leg to stand on. You're simply not important enough. How could one libel a "cartoon name"?
You would also have to prove malicious intent. And of course, you'd have to prove that the alleged libelous statement is false. The fact that you operate an illegal radio station, makes the statement true, so no libel there.

The first amendment allows people to have and to express an opinion.
If G. W. Bush isn't suing all those anti-Bush protesters for calling him a "baby killer", and "hitler wannabe", then how can you expect to win a case here?

> I'd start paying > attention to exactly who you refer to as federal criminals.

Those who break federal law. Plain and simple. That simple fact absolves anyone from libel, since it's the truth.

>..maybe > educate yourelf on what constitutes libel and "federal criminal"

I know more about libel law that you do evidently, as you try to play this silly "libel" game on a public newsgroup, where the 1st amendment allows freedom to express an opinion.

I have a problem with people who stomp on the rights of others. Any objection I might have toward those who break the radio laws, is in direct response to their self-righteous attitude that they somehow have "right" to break the law.

Someone has to take exception to bad behavior. If no one complains when someone does wrong, then we are just as guilty for allowing it to happen. This all ties back to what I've maintained about declining moral beliefs in society. When society turns its back on those who ignore the law of the land, and do not teach their children that ignorance of the law, and their responsibility to society, is not to be tolerated, then we are guilty of profilferating the decline of society.

Don't talk to me about being hypocritical, when you admit to breaking federal law on a daily basis.

I don't know what N8 is concerned about. Unlike you, I speak for myself, not other people.

Of course not. You're part of the problem. That you so out of hand, disregard certain rules, is proof that you don't consider them worthy of your respect. And that respect is what people, like you are slowly, losing with each successive generation. That is what is precipitating this moral decline in society.

They say that ignorance is bliss.

No one owes me anything. I make my own life. But I don't have to stand idly by when others set out to ruin what was once a great nation, with their petty issues, and disregard for common courtesy and respect, and a large helping of personal responsibility.

Says you. And you know so many people right? I really don't care if you and your immaginary friends believe it or not. The definition is already spelled out in any dictionary. One who breaks the law is a criminal.
That's a fact.

They don't have to refer to it. I just think it's funny that you have such a problem with the word criminal. If you are ashamed of what you are, it's never too late to change.

And in no place, in that statement, were the words "akc" or "trouble posse". That was YOUR lie. You are the one implying something that is not clearly stated.

By your very nature of callously pigeonholing cbers as "one of you", you effectively maintain all that hurts your fellow amateurs. Your very words are indicative of what ails hammie radio by perpetuating the "us vs. them" mentality. And speaking of "one of you",,you were guilty of all you speak, long before I, so you, in effect, had a hand in manufacturing this "trouble" you speak of. Don't blame those that came

YOU might have no proof that Aaron is Dwight Stewart. It doesn't mean that no one has the proof. Stewart is leaving for Europe (just ask him). That means Aaron is leaving for Europe. He had to change ISPs (ask him). That means he can't play his alias games so Aaron had to disappear (for a while).
What IS funny is how Aaron made a sudden disappearance in the exact moment
Stewart had to change ISPs. Poor guy...

I agree, as does Nancy, In fact one could use the excuse landshark did, it was a co worker using a terminal from work. LOL. but hey you may have a case against twisty, his incessant calling you a liar etc may be libelous as well. he even made a new email address on account of you,

Perhaps I will start doing the same for Mopar, better yet why don't you do it for Moped scottie? Or are you just being a selective asshole again Agreed. Nevertheless, they are hammies by virtue of a license, which distinguishes a hammie from a non-hammie. Elmers, they will never be.

Ridiculous and shown the opposite. There are many, MANY here who have ignored their bullshit and it does it die? Does it? A most recent example is Jay's antenna..he explained to the best of his ability the inquiries one of these "non-hammies who holds a license" that you refer,
and the poor bastard that was trying to rattle him eventually was ignored, and as recent as today he is still trying to elicit comments from Jay concerning his antenna. Null.....and void...it didn't die.

LOL you cite 1 case and Jay doesn't read this gourp daily, I will cite Funny, you have squawked about this proof thing for how long? What you waiting for, I tell you why because it is is lip service from a malcontent such as yourself.. LMAO How you sup[posedly made a disapperance for over a year, your words not mine, and have not been heard from once(except your alias) richard cranium, then we come to find out you now say you know the exact moment when aaron left and when Dwight left, wow you either have a crystal ball, or your the biggest piece of shit this side of moissisippi, I go with the latter. I hope the same proof you have for dwight is better than the proof of you calling me george, honestly it is so funny you make me pee

.....once again by Twisted. He likes to bring up the Rain Report however he can't explain after this length of time why no action has been taken against Doug. The logical conclusion being there isn't a violation to take action against. It IS a matter of record that action, a warning letter, was sent to the repeater trustee for failure to monitor and control the repeater. Further Twisted has never mentioned being in contact with any of the parties involved. I have by private E-mail. He has zero, nada, nothing, no idea what transpired on the machine that lead up to the warning letter. And he still doesn't. If Doug did anything wrong how come no action has been taken against him? That's the real question Twisted can't answer with any authority. He'll make a lot of excuses, but he has no facts to support them. Seemed like one of the Hams, on the machine where the trustee got the warning letter, was Billie Marshall (N8ORF), who BTW got kicked off another machine last fall in Toledo, the Toledo Mobile Radio Association's W8HFF machine. He received a warning letter from RH. The whole thing is mentioned in CQ VHF, winter 2003 issue, on page 60. This was one of the Hams that Doug made a big deal on the air about as an example of the lack of a control operator doing their job.

Try reading what he posted, Dave. He said he wasn't going to "do that Jusy ignore JJ - he's another of those "one trick ponies". He has convinced himself that I don't know where ten meters is because I couldn't hear the alleged "intruders" for about a month.

He's got a mental problem. He thinks the 9/11 hijackers were "heroes"!

connection.

That is you trying to interpret what aaron meant there was no mention ever from aaron about Dave being in the AKC organization. The akc was a grassroots organization with many contributions coming from outside the organization E plurubus Unum , the very people who believe in what the Akc stood for didn't need a few letters attached to their name to voice thier opinion and displeasure.

I have a friend who thinks much like you do. She went to work at "the" company that won the race to sequence the human genome. She didn't want to work there because she felt that probably mucho evil could be said of them, but decided it was ok to work there because also a majority of the work goes to curing & preventing horrible diseases (& heard one current project is making healthier dog food)...whatever, she needed the job, must have a job, & any job was a good one, and this is a damn good one!!! Long commute, & only a 6-month contract (may become perm) but good pay & very exciting!!!

Hope all is well with you & yours & the hometown.

Take good care!

Twisty is under the persistent delusion that I'm Leland Scott, Glenn Sparks AND N7VCF. And don't forget that everything he says is the truth because he says so!

BTW, I'm going to take the test for the General license in April.

i LOVE football

Commendably, all summer, the Falcons were in major hype. I have meant to write this for a while. Their coming season actually looked to be promising.

The owner of tree murderer Home Depot, Arthur Blank bought the Falcons from the old, dead, conservatively southern family that owned it forever. A family that passively and pathetically merely owned a national league team that could get 0 support from locals and alleged fans.

Not long after the transaction was completed, rumour of lowered ticket prices made their way out. Not only was this true, there were weekly promotions announcing the increased parking spaces to be made available, and ORGANIZED TAILGATING in the works.

What??? Like the sort of stuff that's SUPPOSED to go on at football games, especially pro??? They even got a deal where you could buy a half season's worth of tix for like $50 each. They had some great full season deals I wish I could have split with someone, because I would go.

I can't think of anything cooler than Atlanta finally giving locals and fans a honest football experience.

- - - -

I was there for Atlanta's last big election, that of mayor, complete with oranged
t-shirted campaigners and everything.

the race for representative was also making national news this summer

Cynthia McKinney vs Denise Majette. McKinney was the current in office choice.

So, on behalf of Ms McKinney, the Honorable Reverend Farrakhan comes into town. And Jesse Jackson.

The incumbent is the same lady who whined when Mayor Giuliani turned down the Arabian prince donation of like $10K to NYC.

Now, in all her glory, she used old leftover endorsements from people that DID NOT give her same similar endorsements this year:

Well then, let's re-examine what you said..verbatim:
"My name has never been associated with "AKC" or any "posse", except by you.
Pretty plain, cut and dry what ya' said there, Dave. AS we can see by Voob's post, whom you fought and lobbied for credibilty as a real person for many times, he, along with N8, clearly defined the AKC's purpose
many times..and lo and behold,,,there is your name on HIS list, HIS words telling us who we need "contend" with should he leave. Once again, asking the group to believe what you tell us instead of what we see, continues to illustrate your nature. To outright lie and and to attempt to place the blame upon ME for placing you in the company of the AKC illustrates perfectly your limitations and malice.

Sure..and you name the ones who emailed you concerning "me" <g> deal?
Haha...here's a start who I have exchanged ummm......communications with,,,,some more frequent than others...in order as me arriving to this group..Tim, Mopar, Train, Jay, Shark, Toll, Jim Hampton, JerryO, ,,and a host of others who I shall refrain from naming lest you harass them and start listening in on where you're not wanted..except the bowl..then you can listen with all your impotency. All of the above have taught me something at one time or another..you could learn from each of them,,even Jerry, who has a few radical views concerning freebanders didnt stoop the level you did in attempting to malign those of opposing views with your flawed interpretive personal feelings, which you maintain are irrelevant but enter anyway into the equation, indicative of your inabiltiy to separate the two factions stemming from the communication deficit that plagues you..

Again, you have it backwards..without any corroborating evidnce that the bust...no evidence..equals hearsay..and ignorance.

Voob is irrelevant to your lies trying to misattribute words to me. You claimed falsely and maliciously that it was only I who associated your name with N8, Lelnad, and Voob.....now you falsely and maliciously are attempting, yet failing again to claim that the AKC moniker is of my making.....again, not true..you merely need look at any of Dogies posts where he signed as such.

On a related note, I truly believe if N8 didn't do the things he did on the internet and on the air, he wouldn't have had any problems, as the majority of hammies break laws they swear to uphold

Self-apparent..see,,,the words "AND ON THE AIR".....for one claiming they see the obvious, you're lacking and missing the irony. Here:...if he didn't commit violations on the air, he couldn't have been BUSTED, now could he?
Add to this the attention he intentionally drew to himself and he's like a crooked politician..all eyes are waiting and watching for him to step out of line. Blaming the rest of society for his creation is quite liberal in view, Dave. HIS actions spawned reactions..whatever they may have been.......to blame the reactions is not the source of the problem, merely a symptom and fallout of that which you seek to excuse and obscure.

In the same malice and manner that you have demonstrated many failed attempts to obfuscate and misattribute words to me. That's deliberate malice when you know they are untruths. Concerning the above, yes, you ask a question, then claim "it's a bold statement" when I made no such statement,..... you attempted at implying that a statement was made by me when it wasn't..it was a concoction of YOUR flawed and admitted self-interpretation. It was your communication deficit manifesting again, much in the same manner as you holding the lone view that N8's behavior was "defending the rules".

For one that you claim doesn't often tell the truth, you are placing a great deal of faith in selective posts of mine....so much in fact, ..you calling me a federal criminal has nothing to do with ANYTHING I SAY I didor anything else, except the FACT that I have never been convicted of a federal offense....this mundane bit of legal education seems very foreign to your grasp. The fact that I merely made a post that "YOU right to say one is a federal criminal, let alone PUBLISH it. Do yourself a favor, davey,,,look into it.

More legal education: Claiming "I "think" you are a federal criminal" or saying "i "feel" Dave Hall is a federal criminal" is much different than saying "Dave Hall is a federal criminal" which is what you have been doing...that is not allowed and it indeed is libelous unless true. And dear Dave, when a libel suit is brought, the burden of proof is ALWAYS on the defendant.

Incorrect and your position has been struck down many times by the court. One may commit an act and be tried ina court of law,,and one may have indeed broke the law,,,but if they were NOT CONVICTED of such acts,,you are libeling them by calling them a " criminal". You should

The irony being lost on you is what is found to be"funny". You self-purport to be educated in such matters concerning legal and libel related law, but you have no concept of what constitutes a "criminal"
Again (in case you missed it) a criminal is one who has been found "guilty" by a court of law..NOT N3CVJ. I find that hilarious that you can't grasp such basic law.

No need to take it up with the FCC,,,but one day someone may take it up with you if they decidedly have had enough of your false libel of not "accusing" them of being a federal criminal, but of coming right out and stating it. Read up. A slight difference exists between you claiming you "believe" one is a federal criminal, and you CALLING one a federal criminal, especially when they haven't been convicted of any federal offenses and you are the only one who refers to them as such. Yup..more Incorrect. As shown "aaron" named him with the rest of the members of the AKC. What you and Hall refer to the AKC group as, or prefer to call it, is irrelevant, All that matters is his name grouped with the other troubled hammies...he was indeed fronted off by name by Arron and told we would have to "contend" with him..and we all already have our mins made up of what "arron" and N8 were about as far as us "contending" with them..and it's not what you or Hall tell us...LOL!

Please provide the links. That is totally opposite from accepted

By virtue of your repeated replies one can only draw the conclusion that you feel you must defend an asshole. Most people wouldn't bother defending an asshole because they would realize that it would make them also look like an asshole. You however seem to not recognize this phenomenon. Therefore one must also draw the conclusion that you are a typical asshole. A typical asshole is an asshole who is an asshole because he can't see his behavior as being that of an asshole.

Now getting back to Doug. It was stated by a representative of the FCC that he did violate. It makes no difference whatsoever if he actually gets a citation or not. The point is an asshole intruder to this group got caught and exposed himself big time as a hypocrite.
That's right. Dougy, the one who gives no useful information, the one who's sole purpose is to agitate while spouting the virtues of strict adherence to the rules got caught with his pants down.
Usually this happens in front of (fill in the blank). This time he

The problem with chemical grounds is that you have to keep the chemicals up!

They sure work good, but the upkeep is expensive! If the soil is bad, and you want to talk on the radio, its time to move! :-)

The HAM vs CB arguement again (YAWN)
Is it possible that BASEBALL fans can like FOOTBALL too ??
IS it possible that people who eat MEAT can like VEGETABLES too ??
Is it possible that people who MASTURBATE can like real SEX too ??
Is it possible to relize that PEOPLE are INDIVIDUALS and bunching folks into groups is fucking weird and borderline racist. If ya wanna herd, be a SHEPPARD, if you want to expand your horizons, open your mind !

ham radio operators were made by the fcc to relinquish there freqs. in the fall of 1959 which they had used for many years ,to be given up to a bunch of people who needed only to send in for a license no exams required which in turned pissed off the hams therefore causing bad blood between the hams and cbers.i have been a cber since 1965 and have many ham friends who talk on chs. 1-40.

the reason this is done and if you will notice this is done around the colder months, the more radiator that is exposed the more air that is allowed circulate around it covering it up reduces this and also keeps temperatures warmer inside the radiator. dan

The Price of Gas

You Think A Gallon Of Gas Is Expensive?

Makes one think, and puts things in perspective.

Diet Snapple 16 oz $1.29 ..... $10.32 per gallon
Lipton Ice Tea 16 oz $1.19 ..... $ 9.52 per gallon
Gatorade 20 oz $1.59 ..... $10.17 per gallon
Ocean Spray 16 oz $1.25 ..... $10.00 per gallon
Brake Fluid 12 oz $3.15 ..... $33.60 per gallon
Vick's Nyquil 6 oz $8.35 ..... $178.13 per gallon
Pepto Bismol 4 oz $3.85 ..... $123.20 per gallon
Whiteout 7 oz $1.39 ..... $25.42 per gallon Scope 1.5 oz $0.99 ..... $84.48 per gallon and this is the REAL KICKER.....

Evian water 9 oz for $1.49 ..... $21.19 per gallon.

$21.19 FOR WATER! ....and the buyers don't even know the source.
Yes, and the name Evian, is Naive turned around, and the Canadians are selling it by the millions of gallons to the US.

So, the next time you're at the pump, be glad your car doesn't run on water, Scope, or Whiteout, or God forbid, PEPTO BISMOL or NYQUIL!!!!

If 10,000 CB'er's are on the SuperBowl
then only 1000 can be heard some of the times

Just about the time everyone stops responding to bullshit troll posts, it will begin to die off...

Unfortunately, some are too weak minded to let an insult or a name go by unchallenged, some are too insecure to do the same, and some just can't resist goading them on...

In other words, it'll never happen.

But it is a nice thought.

That's because many many more have goaded them on with the responses.

They're amateur operators, by virtue of having a license, they're not HAMs by the same virtue. They're far from courteous, instructive, helpful, etc, etc, etc.... Therefore, not a HAM, but an amateur. I hope that distinction is clear.

It sometimes takes a stronger man to let something pass, is all I'm saying.. It's just words on a screen, for pete's sake.. It has absolutely zilch to do with real life, so why take offense at it? Kindof like during our misunderstanding, Twist... I was "insulted" in the eyes of the group.. I chose to look past the insults to try to find the root of the problem. We figured out it was the way your newsreader handles quotes, or the way my newsreader handles the way your newsreader posts quotes, etc... Simple solution.. Had I taken the insults personally, we wouldn't be having this discussion. I chose to let them pass, and now there's somewhat of a even ground we can both communicate on... all because I chose not to take offense. Think about that.

It's just the internet.

not, they're not a HAM.. not in the traditional sense of the nomiker.

Blaming all HAMs for the actions of a few misguided, misdirected, miscreant amateurs is just wrong.. That's my point. MOST HAMs are good, honest, helpful people, who may at times quote "The Gospel According to Riley", but who'll help when they can.. Why do you think

I propose people work on their antenna systems, and stop running overmodulated , and line their radios up, before resorting to an amp that may or may not get them in trouble? Think about it.

Why would giving up 11M piss off HAMs?

11M is nonresonant to any of the other HAM bands, with the exception of the very tippy top of 6M, so a separate antenna, or an antenna tuner, was required to utilize these frequencies anyway...

Bad blood? ::shrug:: I don't see it.. Of course, I wasn't around then,

I wouldn't say there was a best part at all. This prick says there is no bad blood? He jumped down my throat because I reponded to a poster about Hams being superior to CBers. I told the poster that there was assholes in every facet of life, including CB, HAM,Neighbors, work, politics, etc. Then this prick gets on me saying I don't know what I am talkintg about, give bogus info about code requirements in emergency situations, and starts asking me for license and call signs. All because I said both hams and CBs have its assholes and good people.

Bad blood? Spend a day here. There sure is hell is bad blood.

Randy, please inform me on these. Are these the most desirable classic CBs?
These look great. He got $260 for a unit without a mic. Are the mics this desirable? Can he get extra money for the mic?

I am a ham who started out on CB, I still have many friends that I to watch a race or ball game and to have a BBQ. I enjoy communicating, pax Americana is ruled by the logic of such nutcases as the Beaufort NC

I wonder when it will occur to him that he might have to move the entire

Dan, I doubt there aren't an overwhelming number of folks around who were active in ham radio back when that happened. Let's be honest; idiots abound and will cause trouble simply to draw attention to themselves. There are a number of hams and cbers that do manage to get along quite well - and there are a number of folks active both in amateur radio and cb. Don't worry about it; the idiots will soon be popping blood pressure pills like candy (assuming they aren't all ready) ;)

Depends on what type of propagation you wish to use as regards the height of the antenna system. The radiation patterns change considerably with different heights above ground, styles of antennas and polarisations used.

There is really no info indicating that a capacity hat would help the antenna. There is a lot of information to suggest that it would probably hurt it. First you need to arm yourself with the knowledge of how a 5/8 works and with the knowledge of what top loading does to antenna currents . Then you can see the effect top loading has on a 5/8. The ARRL has some good reading on this. One of the antenna compendums goes into a lot of detail on properties of 5/8 . The antenna handbook has good info on current distribution and how loading effects it. You have to put the two together. FS reading dont mean much on a 5/8 either. As with any gain antenna you get gain by taking power away from one place and putting it somwhere else, so a field strength reading tell you nothing about what you are doing twenty miles away. An increase close to the antenna may actualy be a decrease farther out.
You also lose coverage when you increase gain of an antenna. When comparing it to say a Half wave coaxial dipole like the old Big Sticks you may place a slightly stonger signal(on the order of .5db) to some locations but you pay for it by not covering as much total area as the big stick. Of course this may be what some people want.

4186. Which radio?

Hope I don't start a war here. I drive a big rig (18 wheeler to some). My old Midland 888 23 channel radio is on it's death bed according to the guy at the shop, receiver is going out and he can't fix it. To old, 30 years, can't get parts he says. Anyhow, I guess I've got my money's worth from it, now it's time to buy a new one. The guys I talk with seem to run Cobra radios a lot, mostly 29's or 148's or the Uniden radios. One fellow has a Uniden 'Grant' and swears by it. I really don't know squat about these 'new' radios, so to those of you that know, what are your recommendations? I really don't need a radio that will give me another 30 years of service, but I'm looking for a radio that will perform well, and not 'live' in the repair shop. Give me your advice here.
Thanks, Paul

Uniden Grant XL seems to be the most popular and reliable, from what I read.
Most older Cobras (148) also use this chassis. If you do get a Cobra, make sure it's an older style. Don't get soundtracker type.

Poor little Evie...got his shorts all atwitter because those big, mean, nasty Hams wouldn't let him have the frequency, and this after HE broke in on THEM! So what does he do? Well, the next logical thing, to him, is if they won't let him have the frequency he will just jam everybody. That way, you see, if he can't use it, they can't use it either.

Actually I looked at the Grant LT. What is your opinion of it? The fellow in the CB shop had nothing but praise for it. Of course he was also trying to sell it to me. I don't even know what PLL is. I just want a reliable radio that talks and hears well. I'm not into modifications or skipping, just want to talk to the other drivers goin' down the road. Guy at a repair shop that does warranty work for Cobra said that he won't even stock the newer Cobra 148's, "They're junk" he said. Kinda turned me off on that model, but a lot of guys seem to like them. Maybe it's because they don't want to admit they bought a bum radio. Often when someone pays top dollar for junk, they still give it high regard.
What is that 'sound tracker' stuff anyway, just marketing lingo?

Well, I have neither, but I have never heard a bad thing about the XL. The LT replaced the XL. The XL is modifiable if you want extra channels. At least that is what I am told. The LT is not modifiable because of the PLL chip, but still is a good radio.

>I don't even know what PLL is.

Stands for phase lock loop. Fancy term for how frequencies and channels are changed in CBs. The XL had one that could be modified for extra channels.

>I just want a reliable radio >that talks and hears well. I'm not into modifications or skipping, just want >to talk to the other drivers goin' down the road.

Either will do. These are clearly these most popular chassis based on reliablility. On ebay, you can get either for anywhere from $75-125. They include Sideband. Try to get one that has not been modified. Get a peak and tune on your own. If it puts out a 4 watt dead key, see if you can get it swinging to about 15-16 or so watts. Add a Astatic Road Devil power mic for your truck, and you should be fine.

>Guy at a repair shop that >does warranty work for Cobra said that he won't even stock the newer Cobra >148's, "They're junk" he said.

Yeah. I heard that too. The older cobras were the same as the Uniden Grant XL.
Uniden made the the board for Cobra.

>Kinda turned me off on that model, but a lot >of guys seem to like them. Maybe it's because they don't want to admit they >bought a bum radio.

Well, that depends if the 148 was before the cutoff when Uniden produced the board. After Uniden stopped in the current 148s, the quality went to shit. I don't know the cutoff, maybe some here does.

>Often when someone pays top dollar for junk, they still >give it high regard.
>What is that 'sound tracker' stuff anyway, just marketing lingo?

Avoid anything soundtracker. Just avoid it. That was Cobras attempt at reducing noise, but I heard terrible things about it.

Check this out:

http://www.cbgazette.com/rev_grantxl.html

What ever you do, avoid Midland. I have heard bad things about the channel rejection.

4206. AMP Questions

I want to run an amp in my car. I want to remote it. The problem I am having is the length of cable for my antenna. If I cut the cable to run straight to the amp (in the trunk) and then build a jumper from my radio to amp would this cause any problems.

My main concern is that it may bring my antenna out of tune. I am not sure if the cable is part of the factory tuning process?

Thanks,

Cowboy67

I think you want to keep the cable length about 18 feet. Instead of remoting it, just stick it under your seat. That will keep the jumper to a minimum.

The AKC would like to thank the United Gay Keyclowns of America for their continued support of the drive to make N8WWM the most famous mean hammie of all time. Your support has truly made us laugh. To show our apprectiation we are donating $100.00 to the United Gay Keyclowns of America Hamsters and duct tape fund. Gay Scottiekins will dole out individual grants as you apply for them. NOTE: Some of you may be disappointed, but these grants are NOT for crack, pot, booze, or illegal radio equipment. We realize that will make the vast majority of you not apply for a grant, but hey...funds are limited. Those things are just luxuries and we realize that there are some poor underprivileged Gay Keyclowns out there who truly cannot afford their own hamsters and duct tape.

Gay Keyclowns sputtering about N8 being busted: they don't know shit

Gay Keyclowns sputtering about his ebay items: they envy his vast collection

Gay Keyclowns sputtering about his character: when they have none at all

Gay keyclowns sputtering about his hypocrisy: when he does not care

Gay Keyclowns making insinuations about where he drops his pants: when they can't come up with a real issue, as usual on the whole, this appears to be correct... but.... you forget to mention that the FCC removed the 11 meter band from the hands of hams because it was not being utilized (considering it was an electronic dumping ground for everything from auto ignition systems to medical diathermy machines, it was labeled as unusable by most hams at the time).

it wasn't until the cb craze of the early 1970's (and the promotion of such through the medium of movies and one or 2 tv programs) that it really took off as a medium of communications. However, the fcc rules of the time did not take into account the effects of "the solar cycle" and what it did. the so-called 150 mile limit could effectively be bypassed with ease when EM storms made the ionosphere reflective to frequencies in the upper HF bands (as such yeilding some very interesting results like cross pacific and cross atlantic communications).

In case most of you have missed it, there are 2 new class D services that are comming online starting last year. the VHF MURS frequencies and the FRS frequencies in the UHF band. Since equipment for these is often cheaper than the average 11 meter radio (which often sells for over $100.00 at most locations), it has meant that most of the old 11 meter operators are starting to migrate to other bands of interest (as well as the new crowds of kids).

I've noticed this trend very recently as my scanner is programmed for these channels and they have become increasingly busy with the chatter of young and older operators from the local 11 meter scene. Conversely, I have seen a drop in the level of noise on the 11 meter band over the last year or so (seems like most of the regulars have either signed off the sir or moved elasewhere).

in any case, one should remember that it was the lack of use by amateurs at the time that resulted in the band being re-allocated for use as a Class D service in the first place.

Yes. Fame can comes from many different activities. Some of those activities are nothing to boast about.

Example: The 10 most wanted list is a list of famous criminals.
Now, how about explaining your fame due to you dropping your

Read number 20.

And for the sake of the nay-sayers that say any length will do.....Isn't 18 feet a length contained within the parameters of "any length"?

I don't buy this one mit. I use the FRS for hunting, and that's it. Kids use FRS. Families use FRS. But take a FRS radio on the highway, and see if any truckers are using them. Better yet, turn on a FRS radio at night and scan the channels. Any channels. You won't hear anyone on at all.

I guess not. Any length, but 18 feet. One site does say that RG-58 should be 12 feet for a 1/2 wave. RG-8 would need to be 14 feet. But most antenna manufacturers seems to use 18 feet, so there must be some credibility to it.

Coax length is comparable to a dog's leg. "How long should it be"? Long enough to reach the ground. No magical length.

See number 20. Not only that, most mobile antenna manufacturers give you 18 feet of coax. So, there are engineers that believe in 18 feet. Saying it's patently wrong is foolish. Now, are there different opinions? Certainly. Some people claim 12 feet for 1/2 wave with RG-58, and 14 with RG-8. But most antenna systems in the car don't use RG-8.

About the length: This is a testy subject with many engineering types.
They have argued with us on many occasions regarding this matter. They say that if your system is set-up properly that the length of the coax is irrelevant. We agree! However, mobile installations have so many variables that a perfect set-up is the exception, not the rule. One guy has a pick-up and another has a fiberglass motorhome. One wants the antenna on the bumper, another on the hood and a third on the roof. Few people want to drill holes in their vehicle so quality grounds are always a consideration. Because of the imperfect world, we almost always recommend 18' (5.5m) when our products are used. We do so with good reason too! At 18' the voltage curve has dropped back to the zero voltage point where the cable meets the antenna which reduces the reactance within the cable itself (a null cable if you would). It has been our experience that if the antenna location makes it somewhat out of sync with its surroundings, cable lengths that are not multiples of our 18' suggestion adds to the problem. To that, our complaining experts say, "Then the antenna should be moved!" to which we say, "You tell the guy with the $30,000 vehicle that he must drill a hole in his roof so he can use a 9' cable". We solve problems in the best way we can given the boundaries that the customer establishes.

On that note, when you have 18' of coax going to a radio that is only 8' away, what should you do with the other 10'? We recommend that you serpentine it like a skein of yarn so that it is 10-14" long and tie it in the center with a wire tie then tuck it away. Do not roll it up in a tight circle as this can cause it to act like an RF choke, which often times will cause system problems.

Ok.. That was patently wrong..

If the coax length changes your SWR and the tuning of your antenna, then the antenna was never properly tuned in the first place.

If you want to remote it, put it in the trunk (or wherever), and use just enough coax to get from the antenna to the back of the transmitter, with a little slack, and call it good.

If shortening the coax changes your SWR/tuning, retune the antenna properly, and make sure the ground side at the antenna is attached well to the body of the car/truck/whatever.

I am wondering if Sideband doesn't say that this is "patently" wrong. I am starting to think he disagrees with me just because he dislikes me, and makes himself look like a complete dipshit in the meantime.

I use common sense when answering these posts, since there are always people ready to jump down your throat disputing it. Before I answered, I looked up several websites to see what the length should be. The major antenna maunfacturers, Wilson, K40, and Firestik, all reccommend using 18 feet. I certainly don't make shit up like sideband or George, and then fail to supply references when doing do.

Now, there was a site that said 12 feet here:

http://www.signalengineering.com/ultimate/coax_basics.html

But they didn't mention that either. I will be the first to tell you I am not an expert at antennas or antenna theories. But I certainly won't claim to be some antenna specialist like Georgie and Sideband, and then be disproven by multiple antenna sites.

Vinnie,
Antenna manufacturers have found that 18 feet is a pretty good average length for a mobile antenna's feed line. It will usually reach from where ever the antenna is mounted to a radio without too much extra, and is usually not too short. There is no particular significance to 18 feet for a feed line at 27 Mhz for any commercially available coaxial feedline. If an antenna 'requires' any particular length of feed line for proper matching, it's a pretty stupid way to do things.

Coax Length Police,
What they didn't tell you is that refering to a 'null cable' means that they are refering to an electrical 1/2 wave length of feed line. The is NO commercially available coaxial feed line which has an electrical 1/2 wave length that is 18 feet. Just shows that a 'little bit' of knowledge will bite you.

The only time you need to worry about the lenght of the coax is if it is part of the radiating system. Your typical CB installation will not fall into that catagory and as such as many have pointed out any length will do, and actually shorter will do better as there will be less attenuation of signal.

Doc, I am not disputing what you have to say. You make some good points. But it's the 18 feet length is certainly not "crap", or "patently wrong". At worst, it seems to be a compromise.

Think outside of the box.....
They are referring to the non velocity factor length of the coax. (The outside of the shield).

Then why don't they tell you to cut it down from 18 feet, to the shortest length? I mean, if they want to sell the 18 feet, then why don't they just tell you to cut it? How is 18 feet a selling ploy? When I go to these websites, they claim 58% gaim on channel forty, will transmit farther, etc. They never say, "our antenna is the best because we use 18 feet of coax".

Now its time to play your game with the tables reversed. Seems you don't like it. Too bad. You made up the rules of the game and now they don't seem fair when they get used against you does it?

And how many replies are there on this news group where one Pirate CBer is defending the actions of another? The same descriptive name you used above can be justly applied to many of the Pirate CBers on this NG as well.

So true, Keith..

The only time 18' of coax is going to make a difference in a system is if the shield of the coax is the "ground" side of the radiator, such as in using a 102" whip in freespace, as a sleeve dipole.

But 18' of coax isn't 18' electrically. (I can hear the naysayers now: "What? Huh? Complex subjects! My brain's starting to hurt! Waaah! Just use 18' and call it good, right?" Wrong.) Velocity factor of the coax plays a part. In the case of RG8X, 13'6" is one electrical quarter wave.

So why is this a bad thing? If you have 1/4 wave of coax, the antenna is going to radiate properly, right? Well, possibly, if there's no other ground available, but there's another issue, here.. Common mode currents. The point of grounding the antenna's ground side is twofold (and probably more, but let's keep it simple here):

1. It keeps the coax from radiating off the shield.. This is undesirable as radiation INSIDE a vehicle can cause interference with the engine computer, stereo, etc.

2. Common mode currents on the coax will also FEED BACK INTO YOUR RADIO TRANSMITTER.. If you can't figure out why this is bad, then you deserve to have holes burned in your lip from RF energy feeding up the ground in your microphone, regulators and transistors burn out in your radio, etc.

In other words, the 18' story is a myth that needs to be dispelled. Run a ground from your magmount if you must have a better ground than is supplied by your current installation. Make sure the antenna is grounded AT THE ANTENNA, and let the shield of your coax act as a shield, as it was intended.

So why do manufacturers supply 18' of coax with their magmounts, or recommend that you use 18' of coax? They want to be sure you have, in most cases, enough coax to get from where the antenna is mounted to the back of the radio. In most cases, it's actually too much coax, in some cases, a barrel and an extension are needed to get the coax to the radio. Why 18'? Is it so hard to conceive that someone at a design company could make a mistake? Happens every day. "Does it?" you ask? Why do you think auto companies have recalls on vehicles they've already sold? Think about it.

Another reason: they know this myth is out there, and everyone "knows" it's not really a myth, so they're using it to sell antennas.

they are not selling 18 ft of coax, it is just a standard they give with the antenna, just like the 6 ft phone cord with your telephone when you buy it. There have been times where I had to buy longer phone cords, and there have been times where I just wound it in a loop and tucked it behind the desk.

Like Chris said, it is there if you need it, and if you don't snip some of it off, and use the part you cut off to make some jumpers. 9 times out of 10, the coax included with those antennas is crap anyway, you are much better off using a hard mounted antenna i.e. stud mount
ect. where you supply your own coax.

For example I have a (Dave will rant about this lol) a Wilson 500 mag mount as an emergency backup, and a radioshack mag mount 2m 5/8 wave antenna as a backup in case I have to switch vehicles. In my personal car I have stud mounted antennas with just enough coax to go from radio to antenna. And they both (CB and 2m) have performed spectacularly this way, on 38 sideband mobile I was talking to a friend in Findlay Oh when a guy from the UK comes back to me and says
I am blowing smoke, this is with a barefoot older cobra 148 GTL.

So I know that extra bit of coax wouldn;t have improved anything other than to clutter up my car as my antennas are mounted in the roof, so I'd have to coil the coax up thereby forming a choke which will lessen the effectiveness of the radiating system and the performance overall.

Deflection time? Just look at who is defending who. Is not Dougie a slime ball? Isn't Dougie pointed out as a violator by the FCC?

Deflect all you want. The fact is you are still defending a person

That puts you in the same category as Dougie.

It's not even a half wavelength. Signals through coax do not move at the speed of light. They slow down to the velocity factor of the coax.

A halfwave of coax is around 12 feet at 66% VF.

So when the person doing the cable trimming botches the job they end up with an antenna they can't use. Or worse, they end up with a shorted cable and a blown radio output. Then the manufacture may have to take the antenna back as a return. After all they did say trim the coax. If they don't then they are off the hook. I think its just a simple matter of product liability. As a manufacture how can one guarantee the performance if people are mucking with the product?

Hate to say it but Joe Average CBer is not, in general, a technical person knowledgeable in radio communications. It reminds me of the days when stereo manufactures would rate the output of audio power amplifiers in peak watts in to a 2 ohm load, or other such tricks, because it inflated the numbers compared to a competitor's product. The advertisements would boldly have the wattage figure only listed, and in tiny print the test conditions. Many people were getting fooled so now there is a uniform test condition that allows the lay-person to make a choice between different products without having to have a degree in engineering to understand the test methodology.

There is no such requirement for antenna manufactures however. The most common misleading ploy used is the difference between the gain of an antenna referenced to a dipole or an isotropic antenna. A dipole has a gain of 2.14 db above an isotropic. Now look at the description for an antenna and try to find what the stated antenna gain is and referenced to what as a standard. Most of the time its not mentioned, or the gain is simply listed as xx db. Or if you're real lucky its listed as xx dbi. If you didn't know dbi is gain referenced to an isotropic you can get fooled. One dead give away is when you see the manufacture list a 1/4 wave ground plane antenna as having 2 db gain. What they really mean is a gain of 2 dbi, which is about the same as you get from a dipole. Some people will assume that one manufacture using dbd (gain referenced to a dipole) has an inferior product compared to another manufacture using dbi. The real case is both products are about equal and Joe Average CBer got duped by the deceptive advertising.

There is no such animal. A 27 MHz radio wave is too long for a short antenna.

You need a minimum of five feet if you would like to talk farther then about a half mile (less on 19 during the day).

There isn't. (That's why the military - which extensively uses a band just above VHF-Low in trucks - has those long whips on its trucks.) The low frequency means you can't have an efficient short antenna. (Another reason why police largely abandoned VHF-Low.)

tnom,
The outside of the shield doesn't carry any signal. So, it's not part of the feed line that we would be concerned with when dealing with 'moving' a signal between transmitter and antenna. Even so, the outer shield of coax can be considered in the same way any conductor's dimensions have to be considered when finding an electrical wavelength.
The diameter of the conductor has to be taken into account to find wavelength, and when done so, 18 feet is still not a 1/2 wave length at 27 Mhz. There's just no way around the fact that 'they' are speaking through the wrong orifice.

Alan,
It just depends on what you call short, or compact. The more you reduce the length of an antenna, the more you reduce it's efficiency.
At some point, the benefit of a reduced size is out weighed by the reduction in efficiency.
Something in the neighborhood of 2 or 3 feet in length is as short, or compact, as I would even consider, and then only if I had to. What you may be looking for is almost certainly different than what I would be looking for in an antenna.
So, this isn't a very satisfactory answer, is it.

It's not suppose to, but in a less than perfect antenna (car body used as a counterpoise) the outside can carry undesirable currents. RF has no brains. It is not smart enough to figure if it's suppose to radiate off of the shield of the coax if FULL decoupling doesn't take place. Full decoupling does not take place in a less than perfect antenna (car body used as a counterpoise)

Since 18 feet is a length coax contained within the parameters of "any length will do" then why not use 18 feet of coax? Its half wave nulling factor could come into play in a positive way.

All I can say here is get a Uniden based rig
I used to repair and service CBs many moons ago and unless it was operator error or a really silly design fault on the Uniden100 in the UK
(They mounted the heatsink to the case of the radio, the vibration from the car broke the solder tracks on the board producing intermittent rx audio!).
Apart from that its Uniden all the way.

Sounds like you have "zero, nada, nothing, no idea what transpired".
If you did you'd be quick to post it to exonerate your good, close

I suppose if he'd done his job, Doggie wouldn't have been able to make "a big deal on the air"? There's lots of repeaters at which there doesn't appear to be a "control operator doing their job" and there isn't a problem. They're called open repeaters, as a rule. So I guess everyone has to close their repeaters to keep Doggie off. I think there's a simpler solution; revoke N8WWM's license! No Doggie, no problem.

The coax should be around 18 feet long because that's approximately equal to a half wave length at cb frequencies. The coax becomes an impedance repeater at if it's a halfwave length so that the 50 ohm output impedance of the radio is "repeated" at the antenna connection for a close to perfect match. There is truth to what some people say about the length not mattering but only if the antenna's input impedance is close to perfect (50 ohms). If you're. for instance, using a quarter wave whip antenna on your car, the approximate input impedance is 36 ohms. Therefore the length of your coax dam sure does matter in that case, which means if your coax is not the proper length to be an "impedance repeater" your swr will go up in a hurry. On the other hand, if you cut your coax to about 18ft., you should enjoy an SWR of about 1.4:1 which is theoretically the best match possible, but some people swear they can get their whips to "flat line" (probably because their coax was a different length and fooled the meter).

I hope this helps to clear up the controversy.

tnom,
A length of 18 feet is as good as any if that's what it takes to connect antenna and radio. It has no 'wave nulling factor' to start with so wouldn't contribute anything in, and of it's being 18 feet long. You're also right about RF being brainless, but RF is lazy. It takes the easiest route to get to where it's supposed to go. If it isn't given an easy route tot he outside of the coax shield, it will confine it's self to the inside, where it belongs.
You make the out side of the coax a 'harder' route for RF by properly matching impedances, then further blocking RF by other means such as baluns or chokes.
The length of the feed line doesn't prevent 'access' to the outside of the shield for RF.
A car body isn't necessarily a bad counterpoise for a vertical antenna, certainly not as bad as you try to make it seem. How 'good' a counterpoise depends on the frequency in use and the degree of reactive coupling of the vehicle and 'dirt'. In instances where a vehicle's dimensions are not 'enough' for an adequate counterpoise (or 'groundplane'), the coupling between vehicle body and earth is also utilized. So in a sense, RF isn't completely 'brainless'. If it finds enough to work with, it does so.
If it finds more than enough to work with, it only uses what it needs. And where there just isn't enough, it comes back to bite you in one way or another.
As far as decoupling the antenna from the feed line, you very seldom ever see 'full' decoupling with any antenna, mobile, fixed, or some thing in between.
I said I wasn't going to bet caught in this feed line length thing again, and I have. But that doesn't mean I have to continue it, and I'm not.
The End

You most certainly did not, you liar. Here is your quote:

No where does it mention the correct length for a 1/2 wave.

Moron, there are 4 website I mention. Three mentioned 18 feet, and one mention 12 and 14 feet. You provided nothing.

Excuse me, you dumb fuck. But if that is true, then why did you dispute me on 18 feet? Answer this question, you moron.

Listen to me, you shmuck. If length doesn't matter, then why didn't you just leave my original response alone, you twit? Isn't 18 feet a "length"? Since most companies ship these with 18 feet, why not just leave it at 18 feet. Why did you have to say:

"18' is the common CB Myth length, use enough cable to reach your amp nothing more nothing less."

Answer the fucking question. Why is 18 feet wrong, if length dont matter? Is it not a "length"?

Vinnie, if I were selling you coax, I'd rather sell you 18 feet than 6 feet ;). 18 feet would be too long anyways for a half wavelength; you have to take into consideration velocity factor. A short circuit (solder the inner conductor to the braid) at the far end of a quarter wavelength of coax will show up as an OPEN circuit to the radio. An unterminated piece of coax 1/4 wave long will show up as a SHORT to the radio. So, yes, changing the length of the coax can affect SWR. This will only occur if the tuning of the antenna was wrong in the first place. If you have a 50 ohm pure resistive dummy load at one end of the coax, the length of the coax will make no difference at all (other than slightly more loss with more length). Oh, one last thing - very long lossy coax will make your SWR look much better than it really is.

Call Frank at FG Best Communications....

http://www.fgbestcommunications.com/

Tell him Dino sent you.

Ask for a Cobra 29 Classic with the super mod kit in it. He has them ready to go for $150.00

While I certainly don't recommend the newer Cobras, the 29 classic is built like it always has been.

I run a Uniden PC-76XL here with the super mod kit and everyone loves it!

Both of these radios are AM only. If you want sideband, you will pay more and the pickings are slim!

If you want reliable communications in the truck, get the 29 or a Uniden!

The coax should be around 18 feet long because that's approximately equal to a half wave length at cb frequencies. The coax becomes an impedance repeater at if it's a halfwave length so that the 50 ohm output impedance of the radio is "repeated" at the antenna connection for a close to perfect match. There is truth to what some people say about the length not mattering but only if the antenna's input impedance is close to perfect (50 ohms). If you're. for instance, using a quarter wave whip antenna on your car, the approximate input impedance is 36 ohms. Therefore the length of your coax dam sure does matter in that case, which means if your coax is not the proper length to be an "impedance repeater" your swr will go up in a hurry. On the other hand, if you cut your coax to about 18ft., you should enjoy an SWR of about 1.4:1 which is theoretically the best match possible, but some people swear they can get their whips to "flat line" (probably because their coax was a different length and fooled the meter).

I hope this helps to clear up the controversy.

I totally disagree with that guy. A ton of truckers still use CB, and many are southerners. They are the best at police detection. Better than any radar.

Nice "hidden" antenna of the 70s was setup with tuning box which screwed into metal trim at top of my Vega windshield. Had two tuning screws. Wire coming out of bottom of box ran down inside of glass and screwed into metal at bottom of windshield. Had fairly sharp tuning with <2.0 SWR about 15 channels wide. But with 4W on AM it had flatland range of about 21 miles. Kick the power up to 40W and it would reach out about 70 miles reliably.Also used the 40W booties on motorcycle with marine Hy-Gain "Hellcat 9" antenna. Had large tunable loading coil inside fiberglass trunk on rack at rear of cycle. With Lafayette 525 radio I'd get about 15 mile range. In '84 I bought Honda Aspencade motorcycle with Panasonic audio system including CB. About twice the range of the Clarion CB on my '82 Aspencade.

Compact CB antennas work about as well as "rubber ducky" antennas on ham radio handie-talkies. Which is how they got their nickname of "rubber dummy load." The absolute best CB antenna is the spring-base 102-inch whip. Next would be the helical wound 1/2 wave fiberglas whip.

If "works well" means allowing you to keep in touch with another similarly equipped mobile less than five miles away then the telescoping mag mount antenna which comes with the little emergency CBs and packs into little plastic case will probably meet your needs.

great stress relief in ONE man.His name is Doug Adair and he's from

I seriously doubt that giving up the 11 meter band back in 1959 has anything to do with ham/CB animosity today. The reason hams look down on CBers has to do with the operating practices of a lot of CBers today, plus the fact that most CBers are looked upon by hams as "appliance operators" as opposed to serious radio hobbyists. That view may or may not be correct, but the hams I hear putting down CB never mention the loss of 11 meters.

Very true, but unless the coax is extremely lossy, you shouldn't notice any difference between 18 feet and 15 feet, or 12 feet or whatever. You would notice difference between 18 feet and 100 feet, though, but no mobile installation should have that much coax... The best rule of thumb is to only use as long a cable as you need to reach between the antenna and radio, with a little slack.

gee,
then it must be dead in your area. I see constant traffic on the 14 channels of FRS allocated here in phoenix. In fact, I can hear stations up to 8 miles away with my scanner and a high-gain verticle antenna for the 450 Mhz bands. A lot of what I hear are kids or families talking with one another. some of the chans are also shared with GMRS and I hear a lot of repeater traffic on those quite frequently into the late evening hours.

I also happen to have (and use) an frs radio (Midland G series 14 chan) and can communicate with most anyone up to 2 miles away with the OEM rubber duck on the radio. IN FACT, I had 4 conversations just last night with a couple of parties looking to startup a small FRS users club!

soooo.... what may not be happeneing in your area is happeneing here. please don't presume that whats true for your location tends to apply everywhere else. It doesn't.

well, its been a problem since about the mid 1960's (I know a few old codgers from the 11 meter band that tell interesting tales about when things started going south between both cb'ers and hams).

Most hams seem to look at the common cb'er as nothing more than an unlicensed nuisance. However, having come from CB myself, this is not entirely true. a lot of todays CB'ers don't have the guidance of some of the older crowd (most of which has either died off or moved to ham radio in search or broader oportunities to talk).

It would help if cb'ers had an "elmer's" system much like the amaeteur community does. Proper guidance, education and examples of good operating practice are a must, especially in todays excessively violent world where the wrong phrase said in jest can easily end up with someone in the morgue with a bullet in their butt!

in any case, I was lucky to have 3 "elmers" living not very far from me, and also being in the boy scouts wasn't a bad thing either).

Sure, I made my share of mistakes regarding CB radio (and some of them are real fine ones too!), but I learned from them. Unfortunately, even the amateur community has its share of "bad apples" (those who refuse to abide by the rules, or learn from mistakes).

an old addage comes to mind: those who live in glass houses have no business throwing stones.

In that case, he will find the wiring for that radio on my site. As the direct link will depend upon whether the browser has Jscript enabled, go to this page and click the "Mic plugs" link... it will take you to the correct page:
http://www.brainbuster.fsnet.co.uk/radio/index.html
The Jscript version is better, you can select the radio, then select the microphone being wired... and you will get a diagram of where each colour wire goes.

Yeah, you are trying to say use the exact length to the radio, even though it clearly doesn't matter, and is not a "must". Just route the excess cable in the vehicle.

That's right. So be it. Why didn't you let it be. If the guy buys an antenna with 18 feet of coax, let it be. Why did you tell him to to make it no longer than he needs. You know introduced error possiblilties, with him having to cut, strip, and crimp.

On which motor home do you need more than 18 feet? Most people mount them with in the front on the mirror or cab. You have seen antennas put on the back of motorhomes?

I am still trying to figure out your reasoning or lack of it. How is Brian's posting a amp, make him a coward. Better yet, how does Riley determine if he is a coward. If Riley a coward detector?

You are disproven by your own websites.
Coax Length Issues Simplified

Question: What is the "correct" length of coax?
Answer: The shortest length that makes it from the radio to the antenna.

Question: Why do most mobile antenna makers recommend 18 feet of coax?
Answer: You got me, they claim you should use 1/2 wavelength multiples of coax. 18 feet isn't even close to being a 1/2 wavelength in any 50 Ohm coax you will find. Check some commonly used coax using the above formulas.
RG-58, the most commonly used mobile antenna coax length would have to be 12 feet to be a 1/2 wavelength. RG-8X would need to be 14 feet.

Question: Ok, seriously nerd, when I trim my coax it changes my SWR. You can't tell me it's not good to lower my SWR from 1.5 to 1.2 by taking off a few extra feet of coax.
Answer: Hey, I'm not a nerd! Go ahead, change your coax length. If you change coax length and it affects your SWR in minute amounts, everything is working fine. If your SWR was 2.5:1 and putting in a 4 foot jumper brought it down to 1.3:1, this large change indicates you have real problems...i.e. common mode currents (see above). Really, you should be changing the antennas length to alter SWR. NO special length of 50 ohm coax is going to fix or lower your SWR signficantly and/or boost performance. Period.

Yeah right. Riley Hollingsworth has his hands full with all the HAM PSEUDO-CBers on 20 and 75 meters right now. I doubt he is terribly concerned with 11 meters at this moment. If he runs the freebanding CBers off 11 meters many could become HAM PSEUDO CBers (or Techs like you, Adair and Stewart aka Voobner) and his job will be compounded! How come all the Hams that like to torment the rec.radio.cb crowd have Tech class* licenses?

Vinnie,

George is a coward because he tries to hide the fact that he is George WA3MOJ. He knows he is a coward so he subconsciously brings it up from time have to work with.

Here are your words. You are misleading the poster by saying he needs to cut it, when in fact he doesn't. You are running around in circles.

"18' is the common CB Myth length, use enough cable to reach your amp

And your attempt to say that it must be no longer than you need is assinine,

20. If your ground plane is good, your mount grounded and, your antenna favorably located, coax length rarely becomes an issue. But, if one or more mismatches occur, you may find high SWR. This can often be corrected by using 18 feet lengths of high quality coax.

http://www.wilsonantenna.com/coax.htm

9. Using a new 18' length of RG/58 (or Mini 8) coax, trim the coax until the following is exposed:

Note, this is when replacing the coax. It doesn't say to cut the coax to exact length.

http://www.k40.com/Technical/antennafaq-6.html

What length of Coax should I use?

The recommended length for coax is 18 feet. If you cannot use 18 feet, you can use a minimum of 9 feet with increments of 3 feet (example: 9, 12, 15, 18).
Please be extremely careful of what you do with your excess cable. If you need to wrap it, let it hang loose and carefully wrap it in a 12 to 16 inch circle (elbow to hand roll), wire tire it in the center, and put it out of sight under your seat or dash. Failure to do so could result in a RF choke.

http://www.shakespeare-marine.com/antennas/ant-faq.htm#CB%20antenna

Can I cut the coax on my CB antenna?

Generally NO! On most Shakespeare CB antennas the coax is part of an electronically "tuned" system, and should NOT be cut or altered. Shakespeare only has two CB antennas on which it's okay to trim the coax: Styles 5223 and 5207. Note that this applies to CB antennas - VHF antenna coax is not part of a tuned system, and can be trimmed.

That's 5 website that say length matters. One says 12-14 feet. Three say 18 feet. And one says don't cut it at all.

Question: Why do most mobile antenna makers recommend 18 feet of coax?
Answer: You got me, they claim you should use 1/2 wavelength multiples of coax. 18 feet isn't even close to being a 1/2 wavelength in any 50 Ohm coax you will find. Check some commonly used coax using the above formulas.

RG-58, the most commonly used mobile antenna coax length would have to be 12 feet to be a 1/2 wavelength. RG-8X would need to be 14 feet.***

http://www.firestik.com/Tech_Docs/63Things.htm

20. If your ground plane is good, your mount grounded and, your antenna favorably located, coax length rarely becomes an issue. But, if one or more mismatches occur, you may find high SWR. This can often be corrected by using 18 feet lengths of high quality coax.

http://www.wilsonantenna.com/coax.htm

9. Using a new 18' length of RG/58 (or Mini 8) coax, trim the coax until the following is exposed:

Note, this is when replacing the coax. It doesn't say to cut the coax to exact length.

http://www.k40.com/Technical/antennafaq-6.html

What length of Coax should I use?

The recommended length for coax is 18 feet. If you cannot use 18 feet, you can use a minimum of 9 feet with increments of 3 feet (example: 9, 12, 15, 18). Please be extremely careful of what you do with your excess cable. If you need to wrap it, let it hang loose and carefully wrap it in a 12 to 16 inch circle (elbow to hand roll), wire tire it in the center, and put it out of sight under your seat or dash. Failure to do so could result in a RF choke.

http://www.shakespeare-marine.com/antennas/ant-faq.htm#CB%20antenna

Can I cut the coax on my CB antenna?

Generally NO! On most Shakespeare CB antennas the coax is part of an electronically "tuned" system, and should NOT be cut or altered. Shakespeare only has two CB antennas on which it's okay to trim the coax: Styles 5223 and 5207. Note that this applies to CB antennas - VHF antenna coax is not part of a tuned system, and can be trimmed.

That's 5 website that say length matters. One says 12-14 feet. Three say 18 feet. And one says don't cut it at all.

What does your ARRL book say, you twit?

It doesn't matter if the antenna system is for cb or anything else, the coax will radiate if the antenna is not a perfect input impedance (50 ohms). In the case of the 102" whip(1/4wave w/ 36 ohms input impedance,mobile) the coax will always radiate some but if it is about 18ft long (half wave length at cb freqs) that will provide the best possible match for that less than perfect input impedance. As to the coax being lossy, there is very little resistive power loss in 18ft. of coax, and if that were the only thing to consider the "half wave 18ft." question would not be an issue, but there are other considerations such as the inductive and capacitive reactances of the coax at cb freqs. These reactances look like resistance to the 27mhz signal except no power is dissapated, instead it is reflected back to the radio if 50 ohm coax is not connected to a perfect 50 ohm antenna. Only if a perfect coax is connected to a perfect antenna will the coax length not matter except for the resistive loses other people mentioned if the coax starts to approach 100 ft in length.

My opinion is based on experience. I was co-sysop of a BBS that was online from 1989 to 1996. It handled Fidonet, and later, Usenet message groups. Users posted with handles to remain (semi)anonymous, just like today. Two groups of users got into on the board, and threatened to sue. Now, how do you think a reputable lawyer is going react when a client asks about suing someone only known as "Malignant Boner" and all you have is an IP address?

Only if the impedance of 100 ohms is purely resistive.. if any part of it is inductive or capacitive, the half-wavelength of coax will invert the sign of the complex portion of the impedance.

Any good antenna book will explain this better, as they have more room to do so.

Wait.. that's backwards..

I really should wake up completely before I post..

Ok.. If the impedance of the antenna input is a purely resistive 100 Ohms, and your coax is 50 ohms, 75 ohms will be presented to the radio if an electrical halfwave of coax is used. If any part of the impedance is capacitive or inductive (+j or -j) that part of the impedance will invert its sign and a different impedance will show up at the radio end.

Set the SWR at the antenna, reading the SWR from the feedpoint, run enough coax to go from the antenna to the radio, and call it good. It's the easiest, and best way.

18' is "any" length, but in many cases it's too much, and in some, it's not enough. So, I guess, do what you want to out there in CB land. It doesn't much matter to me. I for one will only be running the amount of coax necessary for my installation, and not a foot more.

Oh no! Not the coax debates again!!!!!!! Please check google for the past issues of this seemingly never ending saga.

BTW, cutting coax will not change SWR. If your meter shows it changing with length, the meter is LYING to you. All changing the length of coax does is to move the point of maximum current and voltage peaks (AKA, standing waves), which, if the SWR at the antenna is low, should be negligible. This can improve power transfer, but not SWR.

I was also sysop of both a land-line and ham radio packet BBSes back between 1990 and 1995, and I had to deal with similar issues. One of the most famous issues had to deal with a ham in my area (WA3QNS) sending a message that denounced the gulf war (Actually it was a poll), and included a 1-900 number to call. Someone got the bright idea that this post facilitated business use of ham radio, and the FCC got involved. To make a long story short, the rules were subsequently changed so that BBS operators were not held responsible for the content of messages posted by their members. To view otherwise would've placed a great deal of pressure on sysops, to constantly monitor traffic. A daunting task, to say the least.

There have been some successful suits. The vast majority never make it to court though, as there are just too many obsticles in the way, and it's generally not worth the effort. Plaintiffs, in libel cases, still have the burden of proof to show damages, and that is often not quantifiable. It's also hard to draw the line between statement of fact and the expression of an opinion, the latter being protected under the 1st amendment.

It's just hot air. Like the frivilous lawsuits where a criminal breaks into a house and injures himself in the process, and sues the homeowner. No one with any sense would even consider such a case.....

What you are describing is cutting transmssion lines in multiples of a half wave in order to facilitate the most efficient power transfer, where the impedence of the load (the antenna) is not equal to the impedence of the transmitter. What you have forgotten to consider (As have apparently, many antenna makers) is the velocity factor of the transmission line. Typical 50 ohm cable has a velocity factor of 66%. So a half wave length of 66% coax cable is just under 12 feet. 18 feet is an iuncorrect number in this case. 12 feet would be a more accurate choice.

(waves hand) Right here! I have a 3 foot fiberglass stick mounted to the luggage rack on the rear side of my RV. The extra height makes it work that much better, but it's brutal on low lying branches, and the garage door. That's why I use a spring. I run about 24 feet (a true multiple of a half wave in 66% coax) RG 8X.

As a shipper / receiver, a Ham and a CRer I can tell you that many of the truckers are going to ham radio for the extended range from repeaters also auto patch for 911 calls. Many are also using commercial VHF and a few national trucking company frequencies. I have even had a few, (quite a few) that have FRS in the cab for truck to truck in the yard and in close contact on the road. The rest are down on CH-1 because of the BS on 19.

That's not a bad idea, and I've actually seen it happen a time or two. But the average Joe buying a CB to put in his car for road trips won't have that guidance. I always thought it would be a good idea for CB manufacturers to include with the list of CB rules a kind of unofficial "how-to" guide for talking on the radio. For example, newbies don't need to try to impress old-timers with all sorts of CB lingo. Or I think one of the problems newbies have is that they don't know how to go about making contacts, so they end up constantly asking for radio checks or time checks trying to strike up a conversation. When other CBers get tired of answering them and start ignoring them, then the newbie gets pissed and starts playing music or otherwise being a nuisance, attempting to get noticed. If there were a beginner's manual teaching good operating practice, then maybe newbies would learn to not accidentally key up over other operators, etc.

Thanks,

In a word, no. You need to mount the mag mount on the metal part of the car. I'm not sure what the plastic basket up on top of the Xterra is, but for one thing, you need the metal contact for the magnet to stick, and secondly the magnet reacts capacitively to the vehicle body for a ground plane. So if you don't have the magnet attached to the metal part of the vehicle, you won't have a good ground plane and the antenna will be mismatched.

Even if you found a way to backup the magnet with a metal plate tor sandwiching the plastic, or even if you glued it in place you still do not have an adequate ground or counterpoise to complete the antenna.
Ideally your magmount should bond itself capacitivly/electricaly to the vehicles sheet metal mass. This sheet metal mass needs to be tied to the antenna in order for it to work effectively.

Two alternatives:

Get an antenna that does not require this bonding,Try this site http://www.firestik.com/CatalogFrame.htm Look at the "No ground plane" section.

Or attach a hidden wire or wires in order to ground the sandwiching plate or preferably the magmount to the body of the car. If you use this method you may have to lengthen your whip in order to get a good match. Additionally if you establish your ground by using the sandwich plate it will not work unless the plastic is very thin. It sound like the plastic on your installation is not very thin.

It's not forgotten. It just doesn't apply.The point about the 18 feet of coax has nothing to do with coax velocity factors. It has to do with currents flowing on the outside of a nearby wire. The nearby wire happens to be the outside of the coax shield. This coax shield has negligible velocity factor. Its 18 foot length can be beneficial under the right circumstances. These circumstances do arise in a less than perfect antenna (car used as counterpoise). Since 18 feet is a length contained within the parameters of "any length will do" then why not use it?

Ridiculous and shown the opposite. There are many, MANY here who have

Jay didn't goad him on..Jay ignored him, yet he stayed on Jay's ass. Add

And I agree. What I don't agreee with, is SOME of this garbage they pull..... isn't one of those times to allow things to pass. Bad repair advice tht could injure or destroy a radio. Death threats. "Jokes" (Really sick, 'cause such shit is no laughing matte) of child molesting. Personal information attempted for purposes ONLY of malice and libel (most recently admitted by Sparky). This is permitted for merely speaking of freebanding and amps? Not at all, my friend. Sometimes the ends justifies the means.

If it is hurting the personal life of another, whether financially or reputation wise, there are legal recourses to follow. Example: When I had the Sporadic Column, the "twistedhed@webtv.net" was indeed copyrighted. It was why Lelnad was slammed. Lelnad not only violated copyright laws, he attempted to smear my professional copyrighted for-profit good "name" by making several forges and placing my email address to it, as if that weren't enough, he published it..many times and crossposted...each subsequent time he has reposted one of his forges in the body of his posts with my correct email address is another count.......237, at last count <g>. Now I ask you, with a count such as that, would YOU, as a judge or member a jury, constitute that as libel with INTENT? Couple that with his death threat and penchants for relating violent acts toward myself and freebanders, and a pattern begins to emerge. Again, appealing to your common sense, I ask you would this constitutes intent to harass and libel, beyond a reasonable doubt? Now imagine how a skilled counsel would present the past transgressions,,all neatly gift-wrapped,,,copies of warnings from ISP,s and subsequent violation upon violation...yet ANOTHER pattern emerges,...same as N8's...need I go on? ISP's don't mess around when it comes to security violations, hacking, or copyright violations.

In those "days", not many were being fooled on speakers, Lelnad. Those

An electrical halfwave mirrrors the impedance, that is 100 ohms at the antenna, 100 ohms at the radio.

Vinnie as usual you are clueless, Brian said " I'm sure Mr. Riley has better things to do than listen to a coward..."" Not me so why don't you stop sitting there with tht stupid look on your face and ask him. Ok so again you are clueless as to who said what.

It can, but it depends on how much input capacitance the tube(s) have at the frequencies in question. Too much inductance in the balun and you're hurting the lower freq's (160, 80, etc), too little and you're hurting yourself on the higher bands (15, 12, 10, etc)...

The answer is: It depends.

Ridiculous and shown the opposite. There are many, MANY here who have

For decades when I had my jeep and went off road I didn't mind having my CB just kinda bolted onto the metal dash. Now I'm older, sigh, and have bought a new Silverado truck, plan to off road where I can, and will also be traveling all over the US and Canada. Also wouldn't a unit with weather channels be a good idea?

I went to my local CB store, aren't many in my neck of the woods, and they weren't very encouraging about fitting a CB unit. I think they deal mostly with freightliner outfits so they aren't quite as used to an install into a regular consumer vehicle. Since there are two cut-outs in which to install radios etc I thought that they could come up with some kind of install that looked finished. Another issue they brought up was antenna - since I'm going to get a cover for the truck bed which seems to rule out an antenna on top of the rail, and the installer said that he wasn't sure about mounting an antenna on the roof other than magnetic.

So I'm asking the group:

1 Is there a CB unit that could be installed in my truck dash in a way that looks more finished than bolted on or jammed in (I hear good things about Uniden and see many posts negative about Cobra)?

2 What kind of antenna? What do I need if I get a unit with weather channels?

3 The truck interior is pretty quiet, so unit with a decent front fire speaker might work. Otherwise, what speaker set up would work?

Thanks in advance,
Greg

Your label is a bit off... in the design your asking about, you would actually call it an "un-un" both sides of the "transformer" would be unbalanced.

It would not be the best of designs... but toroids are used in both grid and cathode driven tube amplifiers. The tuned circuit helps with a whole batch of issues which include linearity and distortion problems... but legal and good working circuits have been made without them. The 1:1 ratio is less common than most. Ratios like 4:1, 9:1 and 2.25:1 seem to be more common in practical circuits.

It's pretty easy to make a switched tuned input board... even easier to now buy them already made.

Earlier Cowboy67 posted an inquiry about lenghts of coax related to remote (trunk) mounting of an rf amplifier. He has concerns about a magic reported 18ft lenght of coax, should he cut the lenght down or not.

News Group people flew in with more poopy answers than I'd seen in some years... when I posted this message, I counted 82 follow-up replies with much fighting back and forth. Seems few if any had a grasp on the real story.

Hey Cowboy67,

Let me see if we can shed some light on the subject.

First off, the lenght of coax can make a big difference with and without the operation of an amplifier. In many traditional systems, a coax line acts as only a pipe, the most common a 50 ohm impedance path for rf energy. But not always...

Coax lengths are often used to transform impedance values. It's much too complex to go through here... the high points are to try and understand that things happen at X-number times 1/4 wave lengths. Understanding the 1/4 and 1/2 wave length action is very helpful.

Companies like Decibel, Sinclair and many others, use special coax lengths to combine and transform antennas to a common 50 ohm impedance feed point.

Amplifier Companies like Collins suggested that users of amplifiers like their 30s1 and 30l1 consider specific lenghts of specific type coax to improve the amplifiers linearity. ... yes it's true.

There is both truth and urban legend built into the 18th length often supplied with many mobile antennas... indeed, in some applications... the bandwidth of certain antennas require that magic length. Companies like Motorola and Antenna Specialties have broadband antenna kits which say in bright red warnings not to change the coax size/length.

I have some information related to mobile 150 watt class solid state amplifiers which suggest about a min 7 foot lenght of quality coax from the amplifier to the antenna. Other paperwork also mentions using a min 4 to 7 foot lenght of coax from the radio to amplifier.

So the lengths do matter... ("size matters")

One last thing is about coax... each brand and type act quite different in electrical length for same physical length size.
I do quite a bit of coax comparison and setup... what surpises me most how different the lengths are for actual desired electrical lengths compared to the "paperwork values."

I would cut coax length based on examples of the type of antenna and how you feed it. If you provide the type of antenna you want to use, we can go over some best options... post your follow up reply to this thread.

cheers

On my handheld, I only get about 1/4-1/2 mile on a small rubber duck antenna. If that handheld has a BNC connector you can twist off, then you have some options. The better route is to get some used CB on ebay, that aren't very expensive, a small base antenna. You would increase your distance dramatically.

Skipp, my answer was that coax can and does transform impedance, however, if the antenna is properly tuned and presents the same load as the coax's characteristic impedance, length will not matter. When you refer to COMBINING (or phasing) two antennas, now you HAVE to transform impedances - and you will not use 50 ohm coax for that. I also mentioned velocity factor, which would have to be taken into account. The half wavelength is 'magical' only in that whatever match (or mismatch) is connected to one end will show up exactly the same (assuming no coax loss) at the other end. The constant arguing is caused by (as you correctly pointed out) the fact 1) it can matter (phasing antennas) and 2) it doesn't have to matter (if it is a single antenna and tuned properly). I suppose we all should have ensured that we had the exact situation correctly outlined in the first place.

Yes, that is mostly because they see a change in the match with their SWR meter as they change the length of the cable. They have no idea what is causing this and take that reading at "face value"...

The point they're missing is that their load is a complex impedance, and not very well matched to the characteristic impedance of the transmission line. Their time would be much better spent concerning themselves with a proper match at the load side of the coax to begin with, instead of dittling with the length of the transmission line.

No can do... the magnet, and the big piece of metal that it would normally attach to are an integral part of the mobile antenna system. The antenna you speak of was designed to work that way...

A balun is for converting from a balanced to unbalanced load. They are most commonly used for making the transition from a coax cable(balanced) and a antenna system(unbalanced)... although their are certainly other applications. Don't understand what your really trying to accomplish??

The video was created to help hams EXPLAIN ham radio to NON-HAMS. The idea was to make it simple, Barney the Purple Dinosaur level. Most politicians (councilmen, mayors, police chiefs, etc...) don't really understand ham radio, or really care to either for that matter.

But, those are the folks that you have to convince in order to make ham radio part of the picture for emergency services. Like it or not, it is a necessary evil of doing business with the uninformed and ungrateful.

This is a guess, but I don't think there is any money in it anymore. You can blame all the people who are buying the import crap for it. I guess that Uniden finally threw up their hands and said, "fine, if they want junk radios, then they can have them."

As I said, this is only my opinion.

The tube amp doesn't have an input tune? I think a 1:1 wouldn't be what you are after anyhow, you would want something adjustable as well.

IF the antenna is set up properly, the length of quality coax does not matter!

IF there are problems with the antenna and it's counterpoise, this can affect the feedpoint impeadance.

IF the feedpoint impeadance is different then the coax impeadance, you will have "mis-match" which will affect the SWR.

IF you use a poor quality coax with constant varying impeadance, you will also have a mis-match problem.

IF you run an "electrical half wavelength" of coax (which depends on the type of coax you are using), what you see at the radio end is VERY close to what you see at the feedpoint FOR THE FREQUENCY THE COAX WAS CUT TO.

It all depends on the antenna! If the antenna is right, the length of the coax does not matter! If different lengths of coax changes your SWR, then you have other problems and are only tricking the radio.

LIBEL Published material... meeting three conditions: (1) the material is defamatory either on its face or indirectly; (2) the defamatory statement is about someone who is identifiable to one or more persons; and (3) the material must be distributed to someone other than the offended party; i.e., published.

Under the First Amendment, in other words, the preferred response to a defamation problem is to fix it yourself. But since private individuals normally don't have the kind of access to mass media it takes to correct the record, the First Amendment allows the states to use libel law to level the playing field, making it easier for private individuals to counter the damage that can be done to their reputations by mass media.

These two factors--the definition of "public figure" and the rationale for treating public figures differently--play out in unique ways on the Net. First of all, far more people on Usenet and CompuServe (to take two examples) can be said to "thrust themselves into the vortex" of public debate. If online conferencing means anything, it means the fostering of outspokenness--in effect, every opinionated individual has a microphone and an audience, and regular participants in online discussions may even became generally famous in their "virtual communities." It's almost trivially easy to become a public figure on the Net.

Secondly, the comparative openness of access to the Net means that a lot more people who feel they've had their reputations besmirched have access to self-help. If some bozo writes 100 lines of false statement and innuendo about your sex life or personal habits, you can write 500 lines of point-by-point refutation.

These factors may make libel law increasingly irrelevant, at least as far as online conferencing is concerned. It's worth remembering that relatively few people ever actually sue for libel. For one thing, it's expensive, which means you either have to be rich, or you have to have such a convincing case that you can persuade a lawyer to take your case on a contingency-fee basis. For another, the long, drawn-out process of suing someone for damage to your reputation is almost always wearying and very rarely satisfying. (For an excellent discussion of the practical aspects and disincentives of libel lawsuits in the post-New York Times era, see L.A. Powe's recent book, THE FOURTH ESTATE AND THE CONSTITUTION.)

On the Net, in contrast, calling your defamer to account is comparatively easy--quite probably, if your message was online in some topical area, such as a mailing list or Usenet Newsgroup, so were the corresponding flames. And while few flame wars ever end in a clear win for one side or the other, there's still the deep satisfaction that comes of knowing you're in the right, and that you've responded to every false statement anyone has made about you. It's a "day in court" that you can have over and over again, and it normally comes cheap. (This assumes you're not stealing time from work to answer your critics.)

So, I'm going to stick my neck out and make a prediction: in spite of the fierce invective, strong feelings, and often-defamatory statements one tends to see in net.arguments, I predict that libel lawsuits will never be a significant factor when it comes to heated online discussions. It's far easier to hit the "reply" key.

vinnie, agreed jim h makes some good points about feedline and thanx for pointng out the professional way he answered your question. one question for jim h though, how do you define 'lossy' coax? i run rg-8x solid core 60' with i believe no noticeable swr loss (so my mfj 949e tells me).from what you are saying then is long lossy coax akin to positve attenuation???

I know that, but he is asking about a magnet mount. Most of which are not placed on fenders, doors, or liftgates. I would assume he is talking about the trunk or roof, which is where most magnet mounts are put.

I'm asuming you mean Aaron V, and not me. As far as I know, I've done nothing to piss Twisty off, or has Twisty posted an attack on me. I'm actually catching up on things to begin with (threw a nice concert up here that almost got snowed out this past weekend, and was busy with last minute details, ya know..)

You got it backwards, the coax is unbalanced, the antenna system, such as a dipole is balanced.

The reason would be to match an impedance of something other than 50 ohms. Two fifty ohm loads in parallel (perhaps your twin antennas) will yield 25 ohms. In order to raise this to 50 ohms, one has two choices. You can simply bring the coax from the antennas to a T and have 25 ohms, then feed this with two 1/4 wave paralleled sections of 75 ohm coax. The paralleled coax will show an impedance of 37.5 ohms and raise the 25 ohms up to 50 ohms (again, connected to a T and then to the transmitter). Also, you could bring the 25 ohm load through a 1/4 wave match of 50 ohm coax. This will raise the impedance to 100 ohms. Of course, doing the same with the other antenna results in another 100 ohm load. Bringing these together in a T results in a 50 ohm load to the radio. I'm certain there are better ways to do it. One point I often forget; a quarter wave whip over excellent ground (and an 18 wheeler would likely qualify as one heck of a ground!) will not be 50 ohms. It will likely be in the low 30 ohm range. Hmmm ... which brings us back to the coax length police ... at this point, you just might want to have a particular length and impedance of coax to bring it back up close to 50 ohms. Hey, was I one of the idiots saying length doesn't matter? Well, it doesn't if you have a 50 ohm resistive load, which many folks do not. I do appreciate your question; it got this old f*rts brain running again, if only for a moment or so ;) Thanks for making me think!

Best regards from Rochester, NY

Skipp, you can read my reply to Smokey. You are correct - too many of us assume that there is a 50 ohm resistive load presented by the antenna. Thanks to Smokey for getting my brain working for a minute ;)

You don't need any different antenna than if you had a CB without the weather channels. The antenna won't be perfectly matched for receiving the 162 MHZ weather channels, but will still hear them just fine. It's more important to have the antenna matched for transmitting on 27 MHZ.

Nimrod, the analogy was if something is to long you can cut it, otherwise do as you do and tuck it under the rug cause you can't cut it correctly.

In neither of these cases was there any mention of a precedent being set, or what the outcome of the case was. Anyone can sue for anything. Wining the suit is quite different. Even if a subpoena were obtained, all you have is the holder of the account. Do you have any idea how common it is for multiple users to post using one account?

Do try to stay on topic...what does precedent setting have to do with anything?NO ONE mentioned anything about "precedent-setting" cases......

Just becaue YOU can not find the outcome of such cases that were WON, don't enter an equation that it "didn't occur".
Hall asked for examples, he was given a few, and you act like you're entering menopause.

Do you have a clue what subpoena is?
It is an official notice to appear.
The holder of the account is exactly the one that is held responsible.
It helps when you have a clue what you refer instead of following legal advice found on the web or from...(mmmmph) GEORGE!

read your terms of service and you shall see,,but you strike me as the type who not only probably didn't READ his tos, but don't understand it.

Nah..Dogie are a cber..LOL!..and not a very good one.....he was busted by the feds for breaking federal law. N3CVJ said he is now a "federal criminal". Sounds like libel.....
